Daddy Longlegs

It is natural that a baby should look up to his parents. To him, they are perfect. This little fellow has a long way to look, but one day, he too will doubtless be as big and as strong as Daddy or maybe even bigger!
A baby as you know must be given every chance in the first vital months to develop sturdy muscles, strong bones and a healthy constitution. He cannot thrive on love alone.
We are grateful to the Nursing Profession for their constant support in recommending Cow & Gate.

Oral Analgesics

–the importance of solubility

NURSES OFTEN FIND that patients suffer from distressing gastric disturbances after they have been given ordinary analgesic tablets which must be swallowed either whole, or in segments.

Because many people cannot tolerate these tablets easily, gastric irritation, constipation and headache may follow.

For this reason the doctors now rely, more and more, on the soluble oral analgesic—in this field Reckitt & Sons offer a most effective range of salicylates.

They offer Solprin, Codis, Cafdis.

All three contain soluble aspirin—and this is why they all give effective relief from pain without the usual risk of stomach irritation.

Ordinary aspirin, which must disintegrate in the stomach, may leave behind acid particles, and these can set up gastric irritation. But soluble aspirin is already dissolved when it enters the stomach. It passes through into the bloodstream without danger of acid particles remaining to cause stomach upset.

That is why the soluble analgesics, Solprin, Codis, and Cafdis are frequently preferred and prescribed.

SOLPRIN Neutral soluble aspirin.

CODIS Soluble aspirin, phenacetin and codeine.

CAFDIS Soluble aspirin, phenacetin and caffeine.

Salaries and Conditions

ONE OF THE FUNCTIONS of a professional organization is the protection of its members' conditions of service and salaries. Members of the Royal College of Nursing have the right to ask for the help and support of their professional organization in any difficulties about these matters. Moreover, they have a responsibility to supply headquarters of the College with facts, when these conditions seem inequitable.

It is at one and the same time the right, privilege and responsibility of every individual member to seek the help of her professional organization in this matter, by direct and immediate contact with the appropriate headquarters. This is part of the meaning of membership of the Royal College of Nursing, and applies equally to the most junior staff nurse and the most senior matron.

In any grievance, real or imaginary, there are several courses of action that can be taken. The inequity can be talked about and discussed without attempts being made to discover the reason. This usually produces little more than a generalized discontent within the community. The inequity can be borne by an individual, silently, being regarded as an example of a malevolent fate; or proper advice can be sought.

Any member in difficulties with salary or conditions of service should contact the appropriate headquarters without delay. If the member is working in England and Wales, the general secretary in London should be informed; if in Scotland, then the secretary to the Scottish Board in Edinburgh, and if in Northern Ireland, the secretary to the Northern Ireland Committee in Belfast.

The possession of facts about salary anomalies and inequalities by the College headquarters cannot always bring about an immediate revision of the conditions, but they provide the most useful information that the negotiators can have for future meetings of the Nurses and Midwives Whitley Council. An agreement reached by joint negotiation will nearly always result in a compromise, but hard facts will always strengthen a case if the inequity is real.

Individual members should contact headquarters directly themselves, rather than ask Branch secretaries or other honorary officers to act for them. Factual information is more useful than comment alone, and help, support and advice is ready for any member's asking.

News and Comment

On the Birth of a Prince

NURSES EVERYWHERE joined in the general rejoicing at the news from Buckingham Palace of the birth of a baby Prince to the Queen. The president and Council of the Royal College of Nursing sent a telegram of congratulations to the Queen, patron of the College, and a reply was received as follows: "The Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh sincerely thank the Council and members of the Royal College of Nursing for their kind message of congratulations on the birth of a son to Her Majesty and His Royal Highness."

ICN Seminar in Delhi

AT THE inaugural session of the ICN seminar which opened in Delhi on February 15 Miss Edith Paull, president of the Trained Nurses' Association of India, welcomed the 36 seminar participants from 17 countries. A former Minister of Health in India, Rajkumari Amrit Kaur, spoke of the growing interest of nurses in investigating their own problems and suggested that interpersonal relationships and the provision of rural health services were two problems of current concern requiring study. She spoke of the development of nursing in India and of the improvements in nursing education, status and remuneration that had come about since independence. Rajkumari Amrit Kaur was at one time chairman of the World Health Assembly and her wide interests have included the work of the Red Cross and UNESCO. Miss Agnes Ohlson, president of the ICN, is chairman of the seminar. Guests from the government of India and from medical and nursing organizations attended the opening session and met the participants.

Orient and Occident

BRINGING TOGETHER Orient and Occident is the theme for 1960 chosen by the International Federation of Business and Professional Women, and Mrs. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, High Commissioner for India, will be speaking on this subject at the Federation's international luncheon on February 27. The International Federation was formed in 1930 to encourage opportunities for the training and employment of business and professional women.

Work Study Courses for Nurses

SHORT COURSES for small groups of senior nursing staff on work study as applied to hospitals, are being considered by Manchester Regional Hospital Board. A firm of management consultants have facilities for such courses, specially designed for small groups of administrative nursing staff and ward sisters. Courses would give a broad introduction to the scope of work study, explaining underlying principles and how techniques can be applied in the day-to-day work of the hospital. The nursing committee of the Board recommends an initial experimental course.

An informal group of the ICN seminar staff in Delhi. Left to right: Dr. C. A. Hardin, Miss A. Cheriar, Dr. K. C. Seal, Miss E. Broe, Miss A. Matthews, Miss C. Colbert, Professor J. H. F. Brotherston, Miss Y. Schroeder and Miss H. M. Simpson.

H.V. Students' Exhibition

HEALTH VISITOR STUDENTS at the University of London Institute of Education held an exhibition of health education projects at the Child Study Centre in Brunswick Square on February 16. All the exhibits had been prepared as if for use in a programme for health education of the public. Subjects covered included Mental Health, Getting Married, Handicapped Children, Leaving School, Getting Ready for Your Baby, and there was a very impressive exhibit prepared by students from abroad, on nutrition in tropical countries—with samples of a weaning formula made from ground-nuts.

Bristol Experiment

MENTAL PATIENTS from Fishponds Hospital, Bristol, are to be given employment at union rates in a factory administered by a non-profit-making company, Industrial Therapy Organization (Bristol) Ltd., set up by a group of local industrialists, doctors, trade unionists and civic and church leaders. The factory, which will employ only mental patients, and is being started in a disused school, will assemble ball-point pens, packaging boxes and cartons, and simple metalwork. It is hoped that it will eventually become self-supporting. At first the 120-150 patients will live at the hospital, but in the second stage of their rehabilitation they will live at home or in lodgings. While living in hospital, patients will pay up to £3 5s. a week for their keep; while living outside they will be paid their full wages in the normal way, less national insurance and income tax.

Royal Commission on Doctors' and Dentists' Pay—

MOST DOCTORS are likely to receive substantial increases in pay if the Government implements the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration whose report was published last week. The findings of the Commission are based on an exhaustive survey of professional earnings, believed to be the most comprehensive of its kind ever made. Earnings of doctors and dentists were compared with those of accountants, actuaries, lawyers, architects, surveyors, engineers and university teachers. From this survey two points stand out, namely that doctors' earnings are high in relation to other professions and that they are always higher than those of dentists. All-round increases are recommended for general practitioners, and for doctors and dentists in hospitals, but no immediate change is suggested in the fees paid to dentists in the general dental services. In addition to immediate and retrospective (to January, 1960) increases, the Commission recommends machinery to keep doctors' and dentists' pay under review.

—The New Scales

AT PRESENT, a doctor holding his first house appointment receives £486 4s. a year; the Commission recommend this should be increased to £675. The second house post should carry a salary of £750, and the third and subsequent posts £825. Senior house officers should be paid £1,050-£1,100, registrars £1,250-£1,400, senior registrars £1,500-£2,100 (in nine annual increments), and consultants should start at £2,550 at age 34 or on appointment later, instead of £2,293 4s. at age 32, rising to a maximum of £3,900 after nine years instead of £3,385 4s. after eight years. Distinction awards to outstanding consultants should be retained and it is recommended that each year there should be 100 awards of £4,000; 300 of £3,000; 800 of £1,750, and 1,600 of £750. These awards are in addition to salary. Distinction awards of £500-£1,000 are also suggested for general practitioners, whose income should be made to rise from its average level of £1,975 a year in 1956 to £2,425 in 1960.

National Dock Labour Board

WE REGRET that we published in our issue of February 19 an advertisement for a State-registered nurse to fill a vacancy in the Docks Medical Service for which the salary quoted does not accord with the current scale recommended by the Royal College of Nursing. It is not our practice to accept such advertisements for publication in the official journal of the College.

A Tribute to Countess Mountbatten of Burma

IT WAS WITH DEEP SORROW and a sense of shock that everyone learned of the sudden death of Lady Mountbatten in North Borneo which she was visiting on behalf of St. John Ambulance Brigade. Countess Mountbatten of Burma, C.I., G.B.E., D.C.V.O., LL.D., closely identified with so many humanitarian movements, has always been a good friend of the nursing profession. She was a vice-president of the Royal College of Nursing and became personally known to many College members, particularly through her active work as president of the Educational Fund Appeal which owed an immeasurable debt to her dynamic energy and enthusiasm. Lady Mountbatten was also patron of the NASEAN. She gave unstintingly of her time and energies to many good causes, inspiring others by her example and her friendly and delightful personality. The Save the Children Fund, of which she was president, was a cause very near her heart and refugees in many countries experienced her personal sympathy and interest; she was often on the spot with encouragement and help in localities stricken with disaster of any kind. She was perhaps in general best known for her unflagging activities on behalf of S.J.A.B. of which she was superintendent-in-chief, and the Red Cross. Few, surely, have done more to arouse by example the spirit of service to the community in numerous parts of the world.

Lady Mountbatten made friends everywhere. It is no secret that during Lord Mountbatten's period as Viceroy of India her grace and tact and warm friendliness were of invaluable assistance to her husband in the intricate and difficult negotiations needed in the withdrawal of British rule from India.

To her own family—and to the Royal Family to which she was so closely related—Lady Mountbatten's death brings irreparable loss. It is a loss shared by many people in many lands who have cause to mourn the death of a very great lady.

CASE STUDY

The Abdominal Mass

PENELOPE A. SMITH, S.R.N., S.C.M., Ward Sister, King's College Hospital, London

This case study is a tale with a moral for each one of us, and we feel it should be widely read.

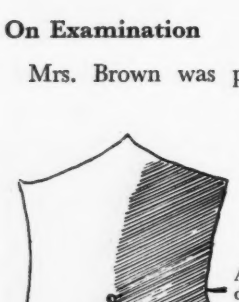
MRS. BROWN was 40 years old, a housewife with three children. For several months she had found that her abdomen was becoming tight and distended, but there was no pain. Menstruation was regular, and this suggested that she was not pregnant. Mrs. Brown felt continually weak and so tired that she could hardly muster enough energy to walk up the stairs to bed at night. In spite of feeling so ill she refused to see a doctor, as she had convinced herself that there was a cancer. The weeks passed by, and Mrs. Brown became a complete invalid. Disregarding his wife's refusal to see a doctor, Mr. Brown consulted their general practitioner, who saw Mrs. Brown the same day. An immediate gynaecological consultation was arranged at the hospital; as a result, Mrs. Brown was admitted on July 27.

Arrival in the Ward

Mrs. Brown appeared frightened and nervous. Other patients were introduced to her and she gradually started to talk to them. After a few days she was more at ease and settled in her new surroundings.

On Examination

Mrs. Brown was pale with a cachectic appearance. Her temperature was 100°F., pulse 110, respirations 36. She appeared dyspnoeic on exertion; auscultation of the chest showed some scattered rhonchi. The diaphragm was high. A mass filled the whole abdomen (see diagram). The size was compatible with a 34-week pregnancy. The mass was not mobile and there was thought to be some ascites. Vaginal examination showed that the uterus was anteverted and normal. The lower pole of the mass could not be reached and no other abnormality could be detected in the pelvis. Ankle oedema was present, but no sacral oedema.



Conclusion: Mrs. Brown's general condition and the size of the mass lead us to suspect a malignant ovarian cyst or a carcinoma of the stomach with metastases in the pelvis. As there was some uncertainty in the diagnosis, an opinion was obtained from a general surgeon, who thought the cyst originated from the pelvis. As a result of this a date for a laparotomy was arranged.

Investigations and treatment carried out to get Mrs. Brown fit for laparotomy. Haemoglobin was found to be only 46% owing to an iron-deficiency anaemia. Blood was taken for cross-matching and grouping, and a slow blood transfusion of four pints was given over 48 hours. This was followed by a course of ferrous gluconate, gr. 10 thrice daily. A chest X-ray was performed which showed nothing abnormal. In spite of this, breathing exercises were started as Mrs. Brown had a productive cough. Abdominal X-ray showed a soft-tissue swelling.

Pre-operative Care

August 2. Six days had gone by, and Mrs. Brown had lost her nervousness. The blood transfusion had improved her general condition, and her temperature, respiration and pulse rate were normal. Haemoglobin was now 84%. Further blood was sent for cross-matching and three pints were ordered to be ready for the time of operation. The house surgeon explained the operation to Mrs. Brown and obtained her consent. Mr. Brown was also told about the operation, and his consent was obtained in case a hysterectomy was necessary.

The day before operation, the abdomen and vulva were shaved and a simple enema was given.

August 5. A light breakfast was given at 7 a.m. A glucose drink was given at 11.45 a.m. Mrs. Brown was assisted when she had a bath at 3 p.m. At 3.45, atropine, gr. $\frac{1}{100}$, and Omnopon, gr. $\frac{1}{6}$, was given.

Operation

A sub-umbilical midline incision was made, which was later extended upwards to the xiphisternum.

The abdomen was filled with a multilocular cyst, containing altered blood, 18 in. long, 12 in. wide and 9 in. deep. It appeared to rise from behind the pancreas, which was flattened and displaced forwards. The cyst also occupied the lower part of the gastro-splenic ligament. The left antero-superior surface of the cyst was adherent to the spleen, which was enlarged to about 8 in., but was otherwise normal. The left kidney was enlarged and mobile and displaced by the cyst into the left iliac fossa.

Diagram demonstrating the relations of the cyst.

The cyst was removed, together with the spleen, with very little bleeding. The abdominal wall was closed with layers of catgut sutures. A long corrugated drainage tube was inserted through a stab incision into the lesser sac to the left of the midline. Interrupted skin sutures of black silk were inserted. During the dissection of the cyst a blood transfusion of two pints was given. This was followed by one pint of Dextraven. A Ryle's tube was passed into the stomach and aspirated; it was to be connected to low-powered continuous gastric suction when Mrs. Brown returned to the ward—this was to help prevent a paralytic ileus. A tight abdominal binder was put over the abdominal wound to prevent distention.

After Operation

Mrs. Brown was moved straight from the theatre table to her own bed. Her colour was fairly good, the pulse rate was regular and of good volume, and her respiration rate was 20. She had regained consciousness by the time we reached the ward. We kept the patient in the semi-recumbent position for the first 12 hours. We did not want to sit her upright too quickly as we knew she would be very shocked; but we did make sure her position was changed from side to side, and she was encouraged to cough. After 12 hours we gradually introduced more pillows until she was sitting upright. Mr. Brown telephoned at frequent intervals and we were able to give him satisfactory reassurances. Intravenous therapy continued to be given for the first three days.

Drugs ordered by the house surgeon. Intramuscular Crystamycin (500,000 units crystalline penicillin, 0.5 g. streptomycin) twice daily for five days. Intramuscular Omnopon, gr. ⅓, for three doses. Intramuscular pethidine, 100 mg. four-hourly when required. Intramuscular Phenergan, 25 mg. four-hourly when required. Soneryl, gr. 3, when diet was normal. Mist. codeine co., 1-2 oz.

First day after Operation

Mrs. Brown looked pale. Her temperature and respiration were normal, the pulse rate was 90. Intravenous therapy was continued as charted, each bottle taking six hours to transfuse. Very little was aspirated from the Ryle's tube. Intermittent suction was ordered hourly; 4 oz. was aspirated. At 12 noon small measured quantities of water were given to Mrs. Brown, which she enjoyed. No bowel sounds were heard; no result was obtained after passing a flatus tube. The physiotherapists were encouraging Mrs. Brown to expectorate, the foot of the bed was elevated three times a day and hacking and clapping continued. Rolling and tipping was carried out once during the night. Mrs. Brown's pressure areas were treated four-hourly and her mouth and nostrils kept clean. She was told that the cyst was not malignant. The wound was re-dressed twice during the day; a moderate amount of bloodstained serous discharge had soaked through the dressing. Intramuscular pethidine, 100 mg., was given twice during the day, and Omnopon, gr. ⅓, was given to settle her for the night.

August 7. On the second day after operation Mrs. Brown looked much more cheerful. She complained very little of pain, and she was moving about the bed more easily. Pethidine, 100 mg., was given only once during the day. A flatus tube was passed with a slight result. The intravenous therapy was discontinued at 9.10 p.m. after the house surgeon had examined Mrs. Brown and had heard bowel sounds. The Ryle's tube was also removed. She was given 2 oz. glucose water, which she tolerated well, whenever she was awake during the night. Intramuscular sodium gardenal, gr. 3, was given at 10 p.m.

August 8. Mrs. Brown continued to look better. We helped her out of bed into a chair for 10 minutes. Small quantities of bland fluids were given and a jug of measured glucose fruit juice was put on her locker so that she could drink whenever she wished. The wound was clean and there was less bloodstained discharge. The drainage tube was shortened.

August 9. Very light diet was given to Mrs. Brown, which she tolerated well. We gave her a simple enema with a good result. The wound was clean, and the drainage tube was shortened again.

On August 11, the sixth day after operation, Mrs. Brown continued to look better. Temperature, pulse and respiration rate remained normal. She was becoming more active and had started to walk for short distances when she was out of bed.

Mrs. Brown had a good day on August 12. The wound was almost dry so the drainage tube was removed. Mist. codeine co., 1½ oz., was given for relief of backache.

August 15. Mrs. Brown was walking about the ward. The stitches were removed from her wound and she was given a bath. By this time the report of the cyst had been returned to the ward; it was a haemangiomatous malformation with no sign of malignancy, and the site of origin was not obvious. We were able to tell Mr. and Mrs. Brown that there was no sign of carcinoma.

We think that this time she really believed us.

Mrs. Brown still complained of some backache on August 16. Mist codeine co., 1 oz., was given with effect.

August 20. We were able to send Mrs. Brown to the country for two weeks' convalescence. Before she left she said that she would never be frightened of hospitals again. An outpatient appointment was arranged for a month's time.

Summary

A patient should never be considered as having an inoperable carcinoma without definite proof, and a laparotomy and biopsy should be performed. Mrs. Brown showed very suggestive signs of an inoperable carcinoma, and at one stage it was debatable whether or not laparotomy should be performed.

TODAY'S DRUGS

Nardil (William R. Warner)

This is phenelzine, an enzyme inhibitor which is being tried in the treatment of uncomplicated primary depressive illness. There is as yet no adequate comparison between phenelzine and ECT, at present the most widely used treatment for depression, but it seems unlikely that the drug is as effective as ECT. When given to chronic schizophrenics who show depression, apathy and inactivity, the drug has improved these symptoms, but other aspects of the disorder are unaffected and a considerable proportion of such patients become overactive and violent.

The most common dosage is 50-100 mg. a day orally in divided doses, but up to 200 mg. a day has been given.

Contra-indications include organic disease of the nervous system, liver disease and blood disease. Phenelzine should be given with caution to elderly patients until further trials have added to our knowledge of its effect.

Side-effects are mild and all disappear on reduction of dose. They include drowsiness, dizziness, nausea, headache, and postural hypotension. Purpura has been reported.

TALKING POINT

HORSE-RACING enthusiasts among the nursing profession who read the racing news in the Observer on Sundays can hardly fail to have been struck by the resemblance between the training of nurses and the training of apprentices at Newmarket as described by John Hislop in an article called 'Trainers on a Tightrope' the Sunday before last.

Any lingering beliefs we may have held that nursing is a special case or has unique problems would have been dispelled. Work in the racing stables is described as 'healthy, interesting, exciting and varied' but the writer goes on to say that since the war "there has been a shortage of labour, due to the high wages and a shorter week obtaining in industry". This, in the racing world, has led to two results—to the employment of the wrong sex (girls aren't really suitable and boys taught in haste tend to develop bad style and habits) and secondly to an increase in the ratio of apprentices to lads who are trained. Thus it becomes more difficult for an apprentice to learn his job properly than before the war.

All this has a very familiar ring, hasn't it? But to continue—"An aptitude for teaching is a rare quality" and out of the post-war situation "a new pattern of training for the future seems to be emerging". And, mark you, in racing as in nursing "A low basic wage does not always represent the true picture" and, "the flourishing stables will increase in size, absorbing the smaller ones—and syndicates will be formed." Just like the teaching hospitals taking more and more hospitals under their wing and group schools being formed all over the place.

The question of differential rates of pay, which figures as largely in the railway industry as it does in the nursing profession, is not so vexed in the world of the racing stables, nor does there seem to be such a multiplicity of organizations, like the NUR and the RCN, the NCN and the TUC; but there is a Trainers' Association (The Association of Hospital Matrons or the Sister Tutor Section of the RCN?) as well as an apprentice's organization (perhaps the Student Nurses' Association?).

But this is all very stupid, isn't it? Nursing isn't a bit like racing horses, is it? But it's very odd, once you start looking for points of resemblance you find them with all sorts of jobs. Just read that article on page 257 where a reader thinks that nursing is like running a hairdressing saloon. Really, she has no idea at all, has she?

Nursing Organizations

I. The Past

by SPECTATOR

Nursing organizations are under discussion at present, and many people are confused by their number and the different functions they carry out. This is an independent attempt to review their functions as they developed historically, and to consider the kind of structure needed for the functions of nursing today.

As SCHOOLS OF NURSING were established, nurses formed hospital leagues to keep in touch with each other and with their schools. Bonds of loyalty were strong, meetings were reunions of friends. Out of these grew various social activities and funds were raised for helping members of the leagues. In 1904 the leagues united in a federation to form the National Council of Nurses, which in turn formed a federation with the national associations of other countries, the International Council of Nurses.

At the Turn of the Century

At the beginning of the century there was no register of nurses. Training schools were increasing in number and their standards varied. The need for a register was clearly seen. About 1910 matrons' associations were formed in England and Scotland, and also the Association of Queen's Superintendents. These associations were concerned with educational standards and administrative problems. Both the Queen's superintendents and the Women Sanitary Inspectors' Association (now the Women Public Health Officers' Association) showed the growth of public health. In 1910 the Asylum Officers' Union (now the Confederation of Health Service Employees) was formed to improve conditions for nurses and others in asylums.

The functions of these various organizations can be classified as follows: social and benevolent activities; setting up professional standards and negotiating conditions of employment. These functions emerged over the years in roughly that order. At the same time the growth of interest from local to national, and finally to international, activities in each of these functions was taking place.

As the idea of a national register for nurses grew, the idea also grew of one organization for all nurses. In 1916, three years before the Nurse Registration Act, the College of Nursing was founded. Its aims may be summarized in the following quotation from the charter: "To promote the advancement of nursing in all its branches, and to guard the interests of public and nurses alike in all matters pertaining to the nursing service of the country. To initiate and carry out a policy for nursing education."

In 1919 the General Nursing Council was established to set up a Register of Nurses. The Register had six parts; all had the first year's syllabus in common, the 'one portal entry' to nursing. Both the founders of the College and also of the first General Nursing Council seem to have thought that the basis for all nursing should be a general training, and that all further training should be looked on as specialization. The General Nursing Council, however, recognized training schools in special hospitals and set up Supplementary Registers, but the College based its membership on the general part of the register. If the General Nursing Council had established an undivided register, or if the College of Nursing had offered membership to nurses on all parts of the Register in 1919, our situation, though still difficult, might not be quite so confusing today.

Between the Wars

The years between the ends of the two world wars were roughly the years between setting up the Register of Nurses and the formation of the National Health Service. Many new organizations were formed; some developed a working structure—some remained static.

The National Council of Nurses, which started as a federation of leagues, had already admitted to membership other associations of nurses with 50 members or more. Organizations as different as the College of Nursing and the various matrons' associations became members, as well as an increasing number of leagues. The National Council has a board of directors of 13 and an executive committee of about 80 people. Its Grand Council is composed of 200 delegates (the numbers of delegates are allotted to organizations proportionately according to membership). There has been no development in this rigid structure. The larger the membership the larger and more cumbersome both the executive committee and the council. During the war the National Council was inactive, it developed none of the services which nurses need today, and its main function now appears to be to act as a link with the International Council of Nurses and other national nursing associations. Its dues are becoming increasingly heavy and its upkeep is costly for the function it serves.

The College of Nursing which was granted its Royal Charter in 1929, developed local branches which send one representative each to a standing committee to discuss policy. Sections for functional groups, such as private nurses, public health and industrial nurses, tutors and ward sisters were formed, each with local groups and a central sectional committee which has a fair amount of autonomy. There are six area organizers, and council members are elected from different parts of the country. In 1941 affiliation was arranged for organizations of nurses on other parts of the Register—male nurses, paediatric nurses, and mental nurses. The National Association of State Enrolled Assistant Nurses was also affiliated.

Educational Work

The College of Nursing was also developing the educational side of its work. Courses for health visitors and tutors were set up first, followed by courses for nurse administrators and ward sisters. The first six-month course for industrial nurses was held in 1938. But education for nurses is offered by other bodies as well. Institutes of technology such as Battersea, universities such as Hull and Edinburgh, colleges such as Queen Elizabeth's and Bedford College (London University) and independent bodies such as the King Edward's Hospital Fund for London have taken an active part in providing education for nurses.

The need to negotiate salaries on a national basis led to the setting up of a Whitley Council in 1948, a permanent negotiating body for nurses and midwives. In this council professional organizations and trade unions work side by side.

With registration, nurses as professional people became responsible in law for the results of their professional services. Legal advice, legal aid and insurance have become necessary as well as guidance on all sorts of affairs. With the coming of the National Health Service and free legal aid the public has begun to call professional servants to account when damage occurs. The professional association work of the Royal College of Nursing increased with this need.

Letters to the Editor

GNC EXAMINERS

MADAM.—I find your leader of February 12 somewhat puzzling, and for the following reason. Many years ago I was asked by my matron to help in the classroom during the State examinations. I enjoyed the experience and later I was asked to help in the teaching of student nurses, so once again, three times a year, I helped, listened and observed. After qualifying as a tutor and encouraged by friends who were examiners, I applied to the GNC with that aim in view, and duly completed and returned the forms. A week or so later the GNC replied very tersely that my application was not successful.

I would like to ask: What qualifications do the GNC require? If they are really troubled at finding sufficient examiners on what grounds do they reject seemingly suitable applicants, without an interview, especially if the candidate is in London.

COLLEGE MEMBER,

MADAM.—Your editorial in the Nursing Times of February 12 regarding GNC examiners is most timely. Many of us are aware that there is a shortage of examiners and that many are not engaged in active nursing.

Last year the Council received a deputation from the Society of Registered Male Nurses about the appointment of male examiners. The result was a slight increase.

There are many men willing, capable and qualified to examine. Let us have the best possible people doing the job irrespective of sex.

I have a letter from the G.N.C.'s examination officer telling me there are no vacancies; yet on their own admission the position is precarious. I ask the Council to give the men a chance.

MADAM.—With interest and surprise I read your leading article in the Nursing Times of February 12.

I have been teaching in a general training school for the past six years, except during 1956-8 when I obtained my Tutor's Diploma in London. Prior to 1954, I taught for two years in an assistant nurse training school.

When I had been fully qualified for 12 months, I wrote to the G.N.C. offering my services as an examiner.

The GNC wrote to my principal tutor, and to my matron (who incidentally is a GNC examiner although unqualified as a tutor) for references, and I think their reports were favourable.

However, I was not even called for an interview, but after a lapse of several weeks, was informed I had not been accepted as an examiner and perhaps I would like to apply again in a "year or so". As my work entails exactly the same routine since qualification as before, I fail to see what difference another "year or so" will make.

Evidently the GNC prefer as examiners unqualified tutors or retired matrons, or matrons whose time is taken up in administrative duties more than actual nursing.

I therefore fail to understand the gist of your remarks as the GNC cannot be as desperate for examiners as you would have us believe.

HEALTH NURSES

MADAM.—No one would deny that a nurse is someone exercising special skills in cherishing the sick, nor can it be refuted that a general practitioner is a doctor practising medicine. They would be amazed however, if, in these days of rapid increases in knowledge, either could embrace and keep up to date in all branches of nursing and medicine, as Wrangler suggests (Talking Point, February 12).

A health nurse needs a broadly based nurse training which is invaluable and is becoming more important with her growing link with the general practitioner. Her function is, and has been for many years, health education and social advice, so perhaps the USA is adopting the British model!

It is regrettable that critics have a point when they say that the attitude of some nurses is too authoritarian. A habit acquired in hospital, it is quite useless in health education, so dependent on altering attitudes, and a proper approach has to be substituted from which can come an awakening desire in the taught to help themselves—no mean achievement on the part of the educator and as difficult as bedside nursing which, because it is seen, reaps approval all round.

Is Wrangler, in her efforts to provoke discussion, so short of suitable subjects that she has to resort to outworn ideas? What about 'How to get the Big Boss to understand the Lesser Fleas rather than their trying to tame the Boss?'

EDITH ROBERTS,
Superintendent Health Visitor.
Essex.

MADAM.—Is Wrangler really as ignorant about some aspects of the nursing profession as her articles sometimes suggest (Nursing Times, February 12)? Surely her tongue is very stiff from long habitat in the cheek.

To want to nurse persons in pain and discomfort with no wish to prevent such states is rank selfishness. It seems Wrangler and her like would wish to preserve disease to provide them with the glowing satisfaction of attending it. Has she never heard of Florence Nightingale, who considered prevention more important than cure, and insisted that all nurses should concern themselves with it?

When discussing nursing, why mention the inspection of drains, which is the work of public health inspectors, or injecting babies, which is normally done by doctors? However I would suggest that one hour spent on these functions is more productive of human health and happiness than many spent in curative or patching-up procedures.

Who gives advice? Is this Wrangler's conception of the health visitor's work? Putting it at its lowest level, health visitors offer advice, if and when needed, and that is a very small part of their work.

Does Wrangler know much about health education in the USA? If she did she would not have us adopt their methods here. Health statistics in this country compare very favourably with the USA, including our lower infant mortality rate.

We would all agree that important changes in nursing and nurse education are overdue. Nurses to be worthy of their title must understand health if they really want to play their part in caring for the sick, and the sooner our educationists realize this and put it into practice the better for those they serve, and our profession.

In spite of what Wrangler says, health visitors, tutors and matrons are nurses, many of them in the highest vocational sense. The health visitor is willing to leave the drama and applause of curative nursing to move among her fellow citizens, doing the unspectacular but very worthwhile work of health education and disease prevention. Tutors leave the bedside for other reasons, the majority to pass on to the future the skills they love—they too are willing to take a background role in the interest of humanity. What of the matrons? They are the leaders of the hospital nursing team, and surely the teacher is one of the team, and should be the very embodiment of the principles of nursing.

BLOOD TRANSFUSION SERVICE USA

MADAM.—I would like to correct the statement in the Nursing Times of December 18 that "There is no voluntary blood transfusion service in the USA—donors are paid $20 a pint and hospitals charge $25."

The American Red Cross Society has a nation-wide programme of volunteer blood service, reaching into every state in the Union. Under this programme no donor is paid, nor do the hospitals charge for the blood. They may charge for the actual administration of the blood, as for any special medication or treatment—but not for the blood. Thousands of donors contribute this blood voluntarily, and many hospitals depend upon this service.

There are a few privately owned and financed blood centres scattered throughout the nation, established before the American Red Cross initiated the present service. In these centres the donor is paid. There are probably only a dozen such centres in the USA but it is quite possible that your correspondent came into contact with one of these private centres. The latter could never meet the demand, which is why the Red Cross undertook the service—following its successful service to the armed forces throughout the Second World War. Except for the necessary professional and technical divisions, the centres are staffed by volunteers. I am writing this on behalf of the great volunteer service carried on under the symbol of the Red Cross.

COMMITTEE MANIA

MADAM.—Wrangler's diagnosis of committee mania is excellent. There is a very common complication called a Standing Committee, and it can almost be described as a chronic state. A case history may help to portray this state.

The officers responsible for the preparation of the agenda—for a Standing Committee—were completely devoid of any material, apart from the apologies and the minutes of the last meeting. After much thought, it was decided to make weight with one item, to discuss a grade of staff employed in hospital, their uses, salaries and status! When this item was reached, everyone looked very learned and eventually a member said, "Mr. Chairman, this is of such grave importance I feel we must set up a sub-committee to investigate the whole position". There was a unanimous 'Hear! Hear!'

A few members of the Standing Committee were elected to the sub-committee, very flattered to be nominated, and they met for many months. The result? The grade of staff is still employed, their salaries are unchanged and their status is as nebulous as ever. It makes you think.

ORTHOPAEDIC SURGERY—2

Low Back Pain and Sciatica

I. W. WINCHESTER, M.Ch.Orth., F.R.C.S.E.,
Consultant Orthopaedic and Traumatic Surgeon, Whittington Hospital, London

Backache, lumbago, slipped disc and sciatica are all terms very loosely used. Mr. Winchester discusses the diagnosis, causes and treatment of low back pain.

THE SPINE is one of the strongest structures of the body. One of its functions is to protect the spinal cord and its nerve roots, but another important feature is that it carries the weight of the head and trunk, transmitting their combined weight to the lower extremities. The spine responds to the various stresses and strains put upon it to a remarkable degree and, up to a point, it compensates well; but should it become decompensated and no longer able to carry the load, symptoms of fatigue occur. Most stress and strain is felt at one weak point especially, the lumbosacral junction, and here too are found many congenital anomalies which may produce an additional weakness in the low back.

Between adjacent vertebral bodies lies an intervertebral disc which has a soft pulpy centre called the nucleus pulposus (Fig. 1). This is surrounded by a tough fibrous wall—the annulus fibrosus—to keep the nucleus pulposus in place. These disc components are designed to absorb the shocks and jars of walking, jumping and the strains of flexion, extension, lateral flexions and rotations of the spine. However, the annulus fibrosus is easily ruptured through injury and the nucleus pulposus may then be extruded—usually in a posterior direction (Fig. 2). This is most likely to occur at the lumbosacral level and less likely at the lumbar 4th-5th interspace. The effects are pain in the low back and sometimes referred pain to the legs—usually in the distribution of the sciatic nerve.

Fig. 1. A normal intervertebral disc seen in sagittal section (left) and in horizontal section (right).

Fig. 2. A stage in prolapse of an intervertebral disc. The protrusion is larger and the nerve is stretched over it.

Undoubtedly, a very large number of cases of low back pain are due simply to imbalance of body posture in relation to the body's centre of gravity. In the past clinicians have diagnosed sacro-iliac strain because the pain felt, or the tender areas found on examination, were localized to the area of the sacro-iliac joints. Usually, however, such signs and symptoms are due to a lumbosacral disc disorder.

'Slipped' Disc

When there is sciatica the presumption of lumbar disc prolapse is more definite. This sciatic pain is caused by true or reflex irritation of the sciatic nerve root components in the intervertebral foramina concerned. The nerve affected is that which leaves the spinal canal at the interspace one below the site of the disc lesion: for example the first sacral nerve is impinged upon by a prolapse between L-5 and S-1. A point of importance here is to appreciate that once a disc prolapses it never returns to its former position. It may shrink by fibrosis and its effect on the nerve root be removed slowly, but the notion that a disc (nucleus pulposus) can be replaced or manipulated back to its former position is one which should be abandoned.

Progressive degeneration of discs leads, after many years, to the onset of osteo-arthritis because the posterior intervertebral joints become disorganized to such a degree that they no longer function smoothly.

Differential Diagnosis

Whether the clinical picture is one of 'acute lumbago' or chronic low back pain (either of these with sciatica) the cause of the trouble is usually a prolapsed intervertebral disc. There are other conditions to be kept in mind, however—any of which may produce a picture very similar to disc disorders. For example, spondylolisthesis (or slipping forwards of the fifth lumbar vertebra), tuberculosis of the spine, tumours (primary or secondary) in the vertebrae, tumours of the spinal cord or nerve roots, ankylosing spondylitis and osteo-arthritis (to mention some) may be possible causes (Fig. 3).

Fig. 3. Eleven causes of pain in the back of the lower limb. All must be considered in the differential diagnosis of prolapsed intervertebral disc.

[All illustrations are from Outline of Orthopaedics by John Crawford Adams (third edition), by courtesy of E. and S. Livingstone Ltd.]

Each case of backache then, with or without sciatica, must be fully investigated and a good clinical examination, with clear X-rays to assist, must be made.

Clinical Features

The patient is usually between the ages of 20 and 40. Usually there is a history of jarring or straining the back which is accompanied or followed shortly afterwards by a severe pain in the lumbar region. Often, the patient is immediately unable to move. The acute pain may subside quickly, but is often followed by a radiating pain or ache in one or other buttock or even down the back or side of a thigh to the calf and foot. This may be accompanied by tingling or numbness, and movements (coughing, sneezing or straining) may aggravate these symptoms. In less severe cases, the pain is only in the back, is felt in the morning on rising and gradually improves through the day—yet becoming more severe in the evening if bending, long standing or walking have been necessary during the day.

The patient may stand with a normal appearance of the spine but often the lumbar lordosis is lost and the back appears flattened. If sciatica is present there is frequently a sciatic scoliosis—the spine tilting to one or other side and, on attempted forward flexion, the tilt becomes most obvious. Lateral flexions are often painful and sometimes extension is uncomfortable. There is tenderness on pressure on the interspinous ligaments or over the posterior superior spines.

In the legs there may be muscle weakness or wasting, and often there are sensory changes in the distribution of any affected nerve. The knee jerks (L3, 4) and ankle jerks (L5-S1) may be affected—diminished or absent. An important finding is a positive straight leg raising test—on raising the limb with the knee straight, pain is felt in the back, buttock or thigh. The severity of the lesion is assessed by the number of degrees the leg can be raised. Occasionally pain is felt on the opposite side when the leg is raised and this is a very significant finding—strongly presumptive of a severe disc prolapse.

X-rays will most often show no abnormality and it is safe to say that if a disc space appears very narrow that it is not that particular disc which is causing the present complaint for only when degeneration of the disc is almost complete does narrowing of the disc space occur.

Finally, lumbar puncture and myelography may be necessary to localize the site of the lesion should clinical examination not make this apparent.

Treatment

Operative treatment is seldom necessary. The principle of treatment is to provide adequate rest for the affected spine and this is usually served by a plaster corset when backache only is the complaint, or a plaster jacket spica to include the affected leg to the knee when sciatica has occurred.

In cases with sciatica an initial period of rest in bed with traction to the legs is useful. Should sciatica not resolve with this, then other causes for the complaint must be excluded by the fullest investigations.

Body plasters are retained for two months and then a corset or a strong belt is substituted for several months.

When only mild backache is present, a belt may be ordered from the start, together with physiotherapy. This usually consists of heat treatment combined with back extension exercises to strengthen the erector spinae muscles and re-educate them to bear successfully the strains and stresses of weight-bearing. Sometimes manipulation of the spine under anaesthesia cures backache but the mechanism is obscure and therefore no promise of cure can be made. It should not be employed when sciatica is present.

In cases not responding to a reasonable trial of conservative treatment, operation (laminectomy) may be in order and the prolapsed disc material excised.

Summary

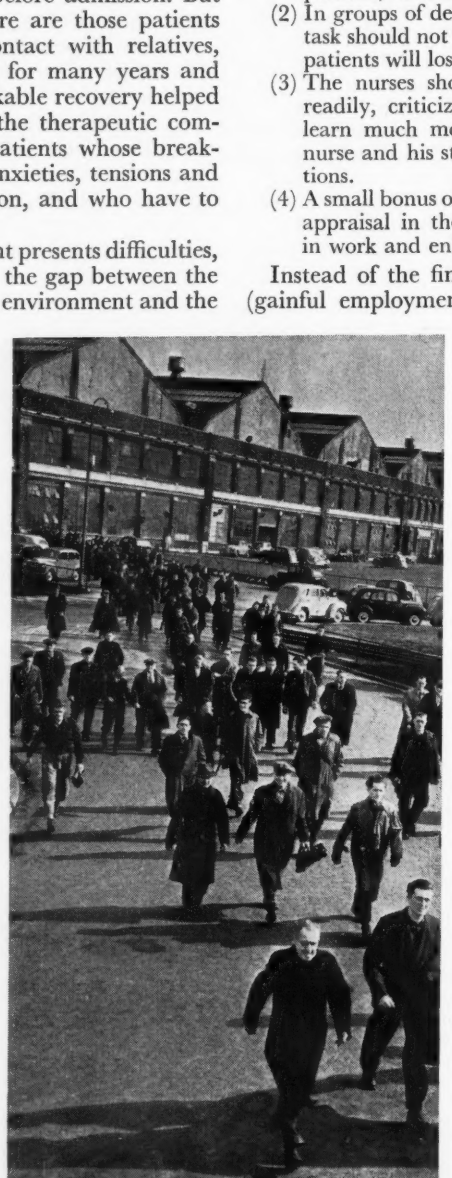
Minor prolapses of intervertebral discs may cause low backache. More severe prolapse may cause acute low backache with sciatica. Either can be treated successfully by conservative means and only rarely is operative treatment required.

Re-employment of the Mental Patient

H. LEOPOLDT, S.R.N., R.M.N., Charge Nurse, Horton Road and Coney Hill Hospitals, Gloucester

IT IS PART OF MY JOB to find employment for patients considered fit to leave the hospital. For many patients this is not a great problem; they return to their families and the jobs they held before admission. But others are not so fortunate. There are those patients who have no relatives or no contact with relatives, those who have been in hospital for many years and only recently have made a remarkable recovery helped by the tranquillizing drugs and the therapeutic community atmosphere, and those patients whose breakdown was partly precipitated by anxieties, tensions and dissatisfaction in the work situation, and who have to obtain other employment.

For these patients re-employment presents difficulties, and one of the main difficulties is the gap between the protective and permissive hospital environment and the often harsh and competitive work conditions in the community. In this article I shall discuss methods which have been successful in bridging this gap and in the satisfactory placement of the patient.



Nurses or Patients?

A visitor to our hospital will find almost every ward nearly empty during the day, but will notice groups of 8-10 patients with one or two nurses working on some project in the hospital, in the grounds or on the hospital farm. As nurses and patients wear the same type of protective overalls, the visitor will hardly be able to tell who is a patient or a nurse. Dull airing-courts have been transformed into well-kept lawns with flower-beds and even ponds.

One of the most appreciated and most enthusiastically executed projects was that of pulling down the eight foot high iron railings which fenced off most of the hospital grounds.

I believe that the following points are of some importance in relation to the rehabilitative purpose of these working groups:

(1) The project must be explained to the patients and, if possible, chosen with them.

(2) In groups of deeply regressed patients the immediate task should not be too remote from the project, or the patients will lose interest.

(3) The nurses should work with the patients, praise readily, criticize rarely and carefully—patients will learn much more easily by identification with the nurse and his standards, than by any verbal instructions.

(4) A small bonus on completion of the project or a public appraisal in the hospital paper will sustain interest in work and enhance the rehabilitative effect.

Instead of the final goal of complete rehabilitation (gainful employment in the community), with some groups of patients one has to accept a more limited goal, such as increased interaction, less autistic behaviour, more spontaneity, improved relations between patients and between patients and staff; in short, a more successful and happier life for the patient in hospital.

Ward Work and Hospital Industries

Ward work has proved particularly rewarding for women who intend to take up residential domestic employment after discharge. The patient leaves the ward after breakfast and does ward orderly duties in a different ward. She is included in the ward team and wears the same kind of overall as the ward orderly. It is important to explain to the patient that this is a trial period and to tell her how long it will last. If it is successful, every effort should be made to place the patient in similar employment in the community on completion of this period.

As in most hospitals, a certain number of patients, usually tradesmen themselves, are working with the hospital artisan staff to regain their skill or, in some cases, to learn a new skill. If necessary they change from one workshop to another to assess their aptitude and interest for any particular trade. The social worker and hospital craftsman concerned should meet frequently to discuss the patient's progress.

Residential Annexes

In 1956 the hospital acquired three annexes, large 10-roomed houses in a residential area of the town. Up to two years ago they were known as 'long-stay annexes', but since then they have been transformed to halfway houses or rehabilitation units, although they still accommodate a few elderly patients awaiting a vacancy in a city or county welfare home. The annexes are staffed by a nursing assistant only, and the patients are allowed every possible freedom and manage their own affairs; indeed, I am inclined to call the annexes guest-houses—more so because a number of patients are actually paying guests. They have been found employment in the town, and pay a certain amount for board and lodging. After they have settled down in their employment they often leave the annexe and find their own accommodation, or are helped to do so by the social worker.

The annexes have been of great value in weaning the institutionalized hospital worker from his dependence on the hospital, and have been used for many patients as an intermediate stage before living and working independently in the community again.

Modified Working Hours

Patients start with perhaps two hours' work in the morning and in the afternoon, which is increased gradually. Under hospital conditions it is rarely possible to reach a 40 or 44-hour week for patients, perhaps it is not even advisable. Slightly fewer hours, maybe 36, might prevent grumbling about inadequate payment, which is usually 10s. to 15s. a week for working patients.

Although the majority of patients realize that the work programmes are for their benefit, to enable them to regain fitness, interest and a normal capacity for work, now and again there is some dissatisfaction over payment. This is rarely a matter for concern—on the contrary, it is a stimulus and a factor that keeps alive the desire to leave the hospital.

Value of Personal Contacts

When I started this work I visited some of the factories on the outskirts of the town, some industrial hostels and the bigger hotels and firms in the town, and introduced myself to the manager or welfare worker. I was received in a friendly manner, and many showed a deep understanding of the problems facing the mental patient on his discharge.

These personal contacts have paid rich dividends in the following years and helped me considerably in finding openings for patients. On several occasions, employers have notified me of a vacancy before advertising it, and often they have kept a vacancy open when the patient could not attend for an interview immediately for some reason (such as being on leave with relatives).

DRO Conference

About every two months we call a 'DRO conference'. In the chair is a consultant psychiatrist. The doctors in attendance on the patient are present, and the two city DROs (disablement resettlement officers, men's and women's sections), the group DRO (covering the whole of the county), many duly authorized officers, who often have personal contacts with prospective employers in the smaller villages and towns, and the two hospital social workers (nurses trained in social work).

We have learned that the maximum number of patients to be discussed is 12, and usually six women and six men are invited to attend the conference.

As a rule the conference opens with a review of the patients dealt with at the previous meeting, and often the DROs give some details about changes in the labour market. The psychiatrist gives a short summary of the patient's mental history and the social worker an account of the patient's social background and work record. Then the patient is called in, interviewed by the psychiatrist and the respective DRO, and given ample opportunity to express his interests and desires. This interview is followed by a free discussion resulting usually in some definite plan to help the patient (such as a course at an Industrial Rehabilitation Unit, or a technical college training course). These meetings last about two hours, are most informal, and are interrupted by a welcome cup of coffee. A short résumé of the conference is sent by the hospital social workers to everybody who has attended.

The success of these meetings is indicated by the fact that within about two months the majority of the patients discussed are placed in employment.

Employment Interview

The pre-employment interview can be an ordeal for the most stable person, and much more so for a patient who is still conscious of his mental breakdown, and perhaps still lacking in self-confidence. Should the hospital social worker accompany the patient to this interview?

I leave this question for the patient to answer. I offer to go with every patient to the interview and, if necessary, also see the interviewer myself. He, as a rule, has been given some information and assurance regarding the patient beforehand by the DRO or social worker. The majority of patients welcome this kind of support, and I, personally, appreciate the opportunity to get to know the employer or renew our acquaintance. After about a fortnight, I contact the employer again to learn about the patient's progress.

This is rewarding work for a person who likes people, who has the ability to establish warm and effective relationships with people, and who believes in them.

Work means more than activity. It means security for oneself and one's family; it gives self-confidence, self-esteem and self-respect through achievement. It means belonging to and sharing experiences with a group. It means a common effort directed towards a common goal. Work means successful living.

New Ethical Code for American Nurses

The code of ethics for nurses, sponsored by the American Nurses' Association, is to be revised in 1960. A draft has been approved by the ANA board of directors and will now go before the house of delegates of ANA. News of the proposed revision was given in the January number of the American Journal of Nursing, and the principles underlying some of the changes are of interest.

For example, a new emphasis has been placed on the importance of professional organization. Two new clauses read:

"6. The nurse has responsibility for membership and participation in the nurses' professional organization."

"10. The nurse, acting through the professional organization, participates responsibly in establishing terms and conditions of employment."

Another new item states:

"7. The nurse participates responsibly in defining and upholding standards of professional practice and education."

Two clauses dealing with the personal ethics of the nurse have been replaced with the short statement:

"12. The nurse adheres to standards of personal ethics which reflect credit upon the profession."

It is of interest to note that one of the deleted clauses stated that "in personal conduct nurses should not knowingly disregard the accepted patterns of the community in which they live and work." It is possible that in this revision the ANA committee was thinking of parts of the world where the accepted patterns of the community are not compatible with the ethical traditions of nursing.

Many of the expressions of principle in the new code are shorter and crisper than the clauses they replace, and the aim throughout has been to let the code stand as a statement of principles and to omit some of the detailed interpretations found in the earlier version, drafted in 1950.

Some provisions of the 1950 Code are not now thought consistent with the dignity of a profession. For example:

"9. The nurse has an obligation to give conscientious service and in return is entitled to just remuneration."

This statement, comment the revisers, tends to perpetuate a paternalistic attitude on the part of employers in regard to nurses and their conditions of employment.

Another former clause stated: "A professional worker does not accept tips or bribes." It is now considered that this type of provision is unnecessary for professional persons.

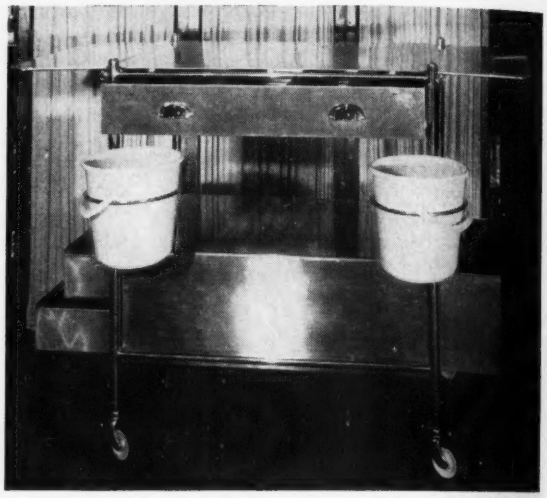
PLASTER TROLLEY

The illustration shows a plaster trolley specially designed by Miss Howe, sister-in-charge, Royal Isle of Wight County Hospital, for use in the casualty department.

It is a mobile, self-contained unit for removal and application of plaster casts in departments where there is no separate plaster room, but would be equally useful in a fracture clinic or operating theatre, and can be taken to the ward.

The stainless steel trolley is three ft. six in. high, three ft. wide and two ft. deep. The table top, removable for cleaning, extends in length by means of two 12 in. flaps at either end. The top drawer is divided into sections to accommodate 12 rolls each of plaster of Paris (sizes 8, 6, 4, 3 and 2 in.) and its floor slopes to enable the rolls to slide forward.

Two polythene buckets (10 in. by 10 in.) hang in swinging brackets below this drawer so that dry plaster will not be contaminated by water.



At the bottom are drawers for bandages, instruments, slings, etc. There is a rail at the back to hold macintoshes. The trolley is mounted on anti-static wheels.

[Miss Howe wishes to thank Miss I. Martin, matron, and Mr. E. J. Smyth, orthopaedic consultant, for their helpful suggestions, and the manufacturers, Furdecor Ltd., 17, Mortimer Street, London, W.1, for the photograph.]

Considerate Firemen

When a fire broke out at the Queen Victoria Nursing Institution (a nursing home under the Wolverhampton Hospital Group), the firemen thoughtfully took off their boots in order not to disturb the patients. But first they drove their vehicles without clanging of bells, and parked quietly in a side street. The firemen then put a ladder up to the ward in which fire had broken out and deployed hoses through the window. In fact, they were so quiet that only those immediately concerned realized that there had been a fire at all.

Acrylic Lens Implant for the Aphakic Eye

ERNESTINE GUGEREL, S.R.N., O.N.D., Sister-in-Charge, Ophthalmic Unit, Southend General Hospital

APHAKIA is the term applied to an eye after its lens has been removed. The eye is no longer able to accommodate for near or distant vision. To be able to focus again, the removed lens will have to be replaced with another one.

A lens may be replaced by means of (1) spectacles, (2) contact lens, (3) an artificial lens implant.

The further the lens is away from the pupil, the entrance to the optical centre, the bigger the magnification of images on the retina. When one looks at an object with two normal eyes the retinal image in each eye is of equal size; fusion of the two enables us to see only one object. This is called binocular vision. When one eye is normal and the other aphakic, binocular vision is not possible. A normal eye used with an aphakic eye with spectacle correction fails because of considerable difference of retinal images in the two eyes—this is called aniseikonia.

The patient cannot tolerate this amount of aniseikonia. There is no fusion of the two images, the patient sees double and this results in headache and giddiness. A contact lens over the aphakic eye brings the lens nearer and magnification will be reduced. But even this amount of aniseikonia cannot be tolerated by many patients. Also contact lenses may not be suitable for many patients with uniocular aphakia; they may be too young or too old.

To overcome this visual defect, which is a great disability to the patient, Harold Ridley first attempted to treat the aphakic eye by means of an acrylic lens implant in 1951. This method, however, had great limitations. The lens had to be inserted, behind the iris, at the same time as an extra-capsular lens extraction was performed, leaving an intact posterior capsule behind for the artificial lens to rest upon.

Design of Implant

Following Ridley, other surgeons such as Strampelli (Italy 1954), Schreck (Germany) and Barraquer (Spain) designed an implant to be placed in front of the iris and behind the cornea with feet wedged into the anterior chamber angles (Fig. 2), the implant carrying a central optical portion (Fig. 3). This method enables the surgeon to choose the type of cataract extraction suitable for each case. Refraction is carried out and the correction required for the individual aphakic eye is moulded on the posterior surface of the implant. This implant can be inserted at any time after the lens extraction, but a cataract extraction should have been successfully completed at least six weeks before implant surgery is undertaken.

An anterior chamber lens reduces the difference of retinal images still further, and can be tolerated by the patient. With a Ridley lens the images, of course, are of equal size.

Since 1956 a series of over 200 cases of uniocular cataract and uniocular aphakia have been treated in Southend General Hospital. The cases treated fall into certain categories and results are meaningless without consideration of the type of case.

1. Traumatic cataract. These cases are the result of a perforating or concussion injury, and are sub-divided as recent or long-standing. The time at which the injury occurred does not seem to matter. Some of the best results have been achieved with patients who lost their sight 30, 40 or 50 years ago. What matters is the age at which these injuries occur. Under the age of 10 years a certain amount of amblyopia is inevitable. Over the age of 10 years amblyopia does not occur to a significant extent.
2. Heterochromic cyclitis, a characteristic unilateral iridocyclitis with cataract.

The use of acrylic implants to supplant the function of the lens has become increasingly common since Ridley first used a lens implant for cataract in 1951. The indications, surgery and nursing of a somewhat different type of implant are described in this article.

Results

In terms of visual acuity, the post-implant acuity can be compared with the amount seen with the aphakic correction in the trial frame before insertion of the implant. Although it is not yet possible to nominate the line the individual patient will read on the Snellen's Chart, it can be said that a large series of cases which do better than expected cancel out those which do not come up to expectation. Full binocular single vision has been restored to many patients.

Nursing Care

Surgery and nursing have presented no real difficulties. The patient is admitted 48 hours before operation. The pre-operative treatment is very much the same as that for cataract operation, with which the patient is of course familiar. (As already mentioned, he must have had a successful cataract extraction at least six weeks before.) The operation can be performed under local or general anaesthesia. The pupil must be rendered miotic by pilocarpine, 2%, 24 hours before operation. Strampelli's implant, modified by Choyce, is used. At the time of operation one corneo-scleral suture is used.

The patient leaves the theatre with both eyes padded. A few words of assurance that all has gone well will help him to endure this 'blackened-out' period. He is nursed on absolute bed rest in a comfortable position for 24 hours. The first dressing is then performed and usually the patient is allowed to feed himself after that.

Soluble aspirin, 2 tablets, is given as necessary and that is usually quite sufficient to combat any post-operative discomfort in the eye. Soneryl, g. 1½-3, is useful to ensure a good and restful night.

The patient is allowed up on the second or third day and the suture is removed in the theatre on the fourth or fifth day. A subconjunctival injection of cortisone is usually given at that stage to speed up recovery.

Occasionally, if there is any sign of post-operative irritability, a course of systemic cortico-steroids is given for a few days.

After Discharge

The patient is normally discharged six to seven days after operation. On discharge he is told to avoid unnecessary stooping, bending or lifting.

It takes about two to three months for complete recovery from the operation. During this time occlusion of the good eye may have to be carried out in patients under 10 years to overcome amblyopia, which is very likely to be present.

It must be remembered that it is only nine years since Ridley inserted his first artificial lens; six years since the first anterior chamber implant was used in Italy; and it is only four years since the first case in this series received its implant. Nobody can foresee the future of these cases but their progress has been encouraging and justifies the risks which have been taken with these patients' eyes as they could not have been helped in any other way.

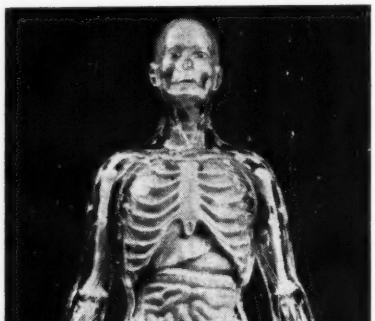
New Plastic Anatomical Model

TUTORS will be interested in this new plastic anatomical model which has just come on the market. It stands 16 in. high and is approximately one-fifth life size. It is supplied as a set for assembly, and costs three guineas.



This transparent model can be dismantled, organ by organ.

The model has three divisions, the skin, the skeletal system, and the internal organs, which can be taken apart in that order.

The skin is represented by a layer of pink tinted plastics constructed in three removable parts. Embossed onto the inside of the skin is the circulatory system of the head, trunk and limbs, and the musculature of the trunk and limbs.

The skeletal system is built to represent bone in white plastic, with the main joints articulated. The crown of the cranium is removable to reveal the brain, as is also the front of the rib cage, which reveals the internal organs.

Internally, the structure of the lungs is shown, and the front half of the heart can be removed to show the chambers. The kidney likewise opens out to show its internal structure and all the organs can be removed.

OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH NURSING

Nurse in Industry

M. M. WILLIAMS, S.R.N., Orth.N.C., O.H.N.C.

"Why did you give up nursing?" is a question industrial nurses are sometimes asked. The author comments on the attitude implied by this question.

THE factory in which I work is engaged in light and heavy engineering. About 1,500 people are employed and a three-shift system is worked. Three State-registered nurses work in shifts so that a qualified nurse is always available. There is also a sister-in-charge who works a normal day, and a part-time nurse-clerk. Nursing staff are responsible to the industrial medical officer, who divides his time between this work and a similar plant in Birmingham.

Training new Staff

There is a planned programme of training for new nursing staff. The first week is spent observing what happens in the department on all the shifts, examining records and generally getting to know the organization. For the next few months, which are probationary, an attempt is made to instruct the new nurse in any subjects in which she may be weak, such as ophthalmic, ENT and fracture treatment, and on-the-spot treatment of injuries. This instruction is given chiefly by the medical officer and the sister-in-charge.

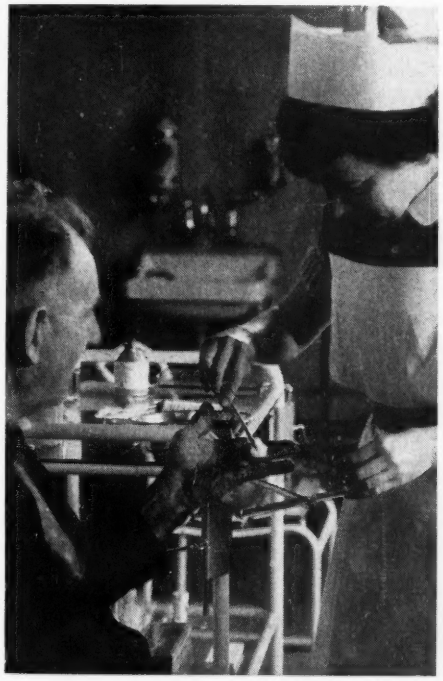
All members of the staff are encouraged to widen their experience and knowledge by means of staff meetings, demonstrations, lectures, quizzes, discussions and films, attending refresher and study courses, visits to other works, reading—there is a good works library—and works tours.

It has not always been easy to arrange these tours. Suitable guides are not easy to find, and the best ones are busy people; also the more doubtful had to be convinced of the value of these visits. There is no doubt that they are valuable, for the following reasons:

Nurses must know how to get to and from the scene of accidents quickly. They must be familiar with the appearance of departments in order to form a mental picture of the scene when told of an accident, so that the plan of campaign can be formed before arrival.

A knowledge of machines, tools and equipment helps to assess the probable severity of an accident. A knowledge of the job, movements involved and materials handled, is essential before one can apply a safe dressing suitable for return to work, and in order to complete a satisfactory pre-employment medical history.

Non-touch technique for dressings.



Accident Drill

In order to promote speedy evacuation a strict drill has been laid down, and the works police, who are trained also in first aid and drive the works ambulances, work under the instructions of the nursing sister. As soon as the police and medical centre have been informed of the occurrence of an accident, the ambulance is brought out, the sister is picked up from the medical centre with her emergency bag, and this small team goes at once to the scene of the accident. The ambulance is well-equipped with all necessary material to deal with any emergency.

Additional assistance is sometimes needed to move a patient. To ensure the presence of trained helpers, a small number of volunteers is trained in moving injured people.

Medical Treatment

When we talk of treating patients it should be remembered that works accidents are not, as a rule, the major part of our work. Each week the nursing staff see about 60-80 people a day. This is excluding routine medical examinations and workers who consult the doctor.

All medical cases have their temperatures recorded, a procedure viewed cynically by some. However, this is not time-wasting. During one period of 12 months 50 people came to the department either requesting 'a couple of pills, please nurse' or complaining of 'feeling funny', and were found to have temperatures of 100°F. or over.

Early Diagnosis

Among other cases were three people who just 'felt ill', and were found to have coronary thrombosis; three people with vague symptoms who had serious vascular disorders, and one man who collapsed in the department and was taken to hospital with a pulmonary infarct.

Two people lost consciousness with neurological disorders, one reported with serious symptoms of kidney disease, one had an acute gastric ulcer, one appendicitis, one patient requested heat treatment for a pain in the chest and was found to have shingles, two workers asked to have an eye bath and were found to need specialist attention for serious eye diseases. One case of early cancer of the face was detected and sent for immediate treatment.

Treating an eye injury.

The seriousness of all these cases was detected by the nursing staff alone, and early diagnosis enabled the appropriate treatment to be initiated without delay.

Scope

To be a part of industry can be fun, full of interest, and most rewarding—but only if you are prepared to work hard to gain and maintain a thorough knowledge of all aspects of your job and the works. Your successes will gain you many friends and willing helpers but your failures never get discharged and the effects of them are difficult to live down.

In addition, indifference and apathy are soon scornfully detected. You need to 'sell' your professional ability—and the customers are most critical.

Vacancies in Old People's Homes

It is a saddening thought that vacancies in old people's homes are, for the most part, regulated by the death rate of the occupants. There is, for instance, at Worthing a home for elderly women which has a waiting list of 17 people. "Owing to the increased age to which persons are living, vacancies in homes of this type are infrequent and, in fact, at this particular home there has only been one admission in the last 3½ years", says Worthing National Assistance Committee.

Aid for the Mentally Infirm

Manchester is to provide nine hostels for patients in mental and mental deficiency hospitals who could be discharged if they had suitable accommodation. The corporation has been informed by Manchester Regional Hospital Board that there are at present 103 patients over 60 years of age and 161 between 16 and 59 who could be discharged to hostels of this kind.

The corporation is also to build two day centres and clubs where mentally disordered adults—particularly those who have had hospital treatment—will be able to meet and acquire increased confidence in themselves and in their ability to make contacts with others.

That Literary Annual Report

A unique feature of the annual report of Dr. Llywelyn Roberts, MOH, Sheffield, is the apt quotation heading each section (as this column mentioned last year). For example: Maternity and Child Welfare—"There are times when parenthood seems nothing but feeding the mouth that bites you" (Peter de Vries); Domestic Help—"You shall find out . . . how hard a path, the going down and going up another's stairs" (Dante—The Divine Comedy); Home Nursing—"I was sick, and ye visited me" (St. Matthew, xxv, 36); Health Visiting—"The only thing to do with good advice is to pass it on, it is never of any use to oneself" (Oscar Wilde); and Public Health Inspection—"An' I thowt 'twer the will o' the Lord but Miss Annie she said it wur drains" (Tennyson—The Village Wife).

Introducing his report, Dr. Roberts refers to the work of the City's health visitors which includes "activities as varied as the investigation of accidents, helping in an inquiry regarding the value of influenza vaccine, care of the aged, promoting a 'meals on wheels' service and the tracing of sources of infection in tuberculosis and venereal disease". During the year poliomyelitis vaccination and the promotion of clean air assumed major proportions. Dr. Roberts looks forward to the day—20 years ahead perhaps—when the open coal fire will be as obsolete as the privy midden.

SERIAL—2

SCENES FROM INSTITUTIONAL LIFE

We are publishing extracts from John Vaizey's account of his two wartime years in hospital with osteomyelitis of the ilium. The book is published by Faber and Faber at 10s. 6d.

IT WAS NOW that my horror fully began. The next four weeks were the most awful in my life. The previous four had been passed partly in high fever, wholly under the shadow of death and were punctuated by the long periods of unconsciousness that accompanied the operations.

From now on there was a humdrum beastliness to fill the days and nights. One was surrounded by beastly old men who coughed and spat and snored and called out. My visitors were only allowed in for a short time in the evening, or even only three times a week. My plaster was acutely uncomfortable. Soon it smelt abominably, and there was a squelching sound of wet pus and blood as I was moved. I was almost completely helpless and had to be fed and given water to drink through a feeding cup with a long spout. Careless nurses would hold it too long and it would run over my face, or pieces of skin from the milk would drift into my mouth and I would feel sick.

The nights passed in sleeplessness. The nurses wrote at a table at the foot of my bed with a green shade over the lamp. There was noise and disturbance, and if I called out (as I often did) I was reproved for selfishness, and threatened with being put all by myself in a dark room. Often they did not come.

My foot dropped. It was put in a splint. I developed terrible bedsores on the heels, and above all on my back. A deep, deep hole developed just next to my spine where the plaster rubbed the edge of my back.

All the time I was in the ward I repeatedly asked why? why? why? All the horrors I had ever dreamt of had been more than fully realized in me; it seemed, and it seems, a deep violation of the privacy and solitude that is every man's right, to be violently and disgustingly assaulted by smelly disease and by vulgar nurses for whom the performance of these daily functions was an overriding necessity. Always there were these disgusting old men, the gnawing pain, the smell, the noise and the acute homesickness. Freedom of movement, thought, speech and of action were totally lost.

Hour after hour I felt with a bitter anguish the question 'why?' There were a number of answers given to me. The first was by the nurses. "You're not the only one, you know. There are plenty of others as bad as you and they don't complain all the time." This seemed, and seems, cold comfort. This life is all one has and the thought that other people pass lives equally as dismal, as handicapped, is no comfort at all; it merely enlarges the original question until its comprehension includes all the other horrors of which the world was, and is, full. It was no satisfaction to be told that some old men were dying of cancer when these same old men had distracted attention from me, had disturbed my day, had revolted my consciousness. I longed for the purple coverlet to be put over them and for them to be wheeled to the mortuary.

Another answer was propounded by the Christian ministers (both of them) who came to see me. This was that suffering was ennobling. As a doctrine this suffered from the disadvantage of being completely untrue; it was self-evident to me that my own suffering had turned me into a whining self-pitying wreck of a personality, and that the people by whom I was surrounded were in no better case, though those who had suffered least were the least affected by it. Above all, perhaps, some of the nurses seemed cruel and coarsened by the burdens of work imposed on them and they were made callous by the continual contact with flesh in its most repellent aspects, though I never resolved to my satisfaction how far the coarsening was an inevitable result of their work and how far they chose their work because of their coarseness.

In after life I have found it difficult to write or think about this suffering. In an important sense I have come to view whatever happens as irrelevant: the only important thing is to maintain in this oneself the I, the self, the inviolate part of human personality that can never be shared or be known by others. It is, however, precisely this self that the sufferings of severe physical illness make most hard to maintain. I have often felt, though at times I tell myself that it is not so, that at this time I fought a battle and lost it, that in some way I should have triumphed over the hospital at P., and that I should have conquered the suffering in my illness in the way in which I later conquered the consequences of the illness. But I was only fourteen, and I was very ill, and they were very cruel. I became a fanatical hater of the circumstances in which I was placed. I hated myself, my illness, those who were sick, those who were well, P., its hospital and those who served in it.

By this time I was incontinent and I was usually reproved by Sister for dirtying my bed. The places on my head were improving, but generally my physical condition was wasting away. People who came to see me could not come near because of the stench, which the other patients blamed upon the incontinence and not upon the pus.

The medical superintendent imposed absolute silence in the wards during his visits; no patient was allowed to read or smoke, far less talk, and he would stand at the foot of beds and shout for silence if he considered that he was in any way disturbed at his work.

One night I screamed and screamed in desperation.

When the night nurse, whom I hated, came and asked angrily why I was disturbing the other patients, I told her that I had a dream she was chasing me. "Next time I will", she said. I suppose she was young and tired and frightened, but I hated her.

How many children have in the past known such sights and horrors? I suppose most of the world's children. It is, however, a terrible thing when an over-protected highly civilized child is put into such a situation; perhaps the most terrible thing of all is when the child is made ashamed of that civilization, is accused of his sensitivity and is despised for his horror at such surroundings.

One day they began to talk of my transfer to a hospital for children in the country near London. I resisted the idea wholly. I still hoped and prayed for my immediate recovery. Every night, if I slept, I was convinced that I should wake up at home, free from all this. Every night I awoke to the smell, the pain, and the plaster prison in which I could not move. Gradually it was cutting through my spine. But still they talked of my transfer. One of the patients who had been there spoke of it. He, in particular, horrified me. While there he had contracted a disease of his kidneys, and in P. hospital a tube had to be pushed down his penis, while he was unanaesthetized; he told me this tale in daily horrifying instalments, associating in my mind the thought of transfer into inability to use the urine bottle.

One day it was fixed. My mother was to come with me in the ambulance. The dull January days turned to bright sunshine. All that February I remember the bright sun falling over the neighbouring block of wards, on to the window and across the floor of the ward I was in. Sixteen years later I remember it, the sunshine filtering through the particles of dust and illumining the flowers.

On a Tuesday morning, with infinite pain, my trolley was wheeled to a waiting ambulance. My mother was there, in tears; they refused to take her on board. In tears, we drove away, into the unknown.

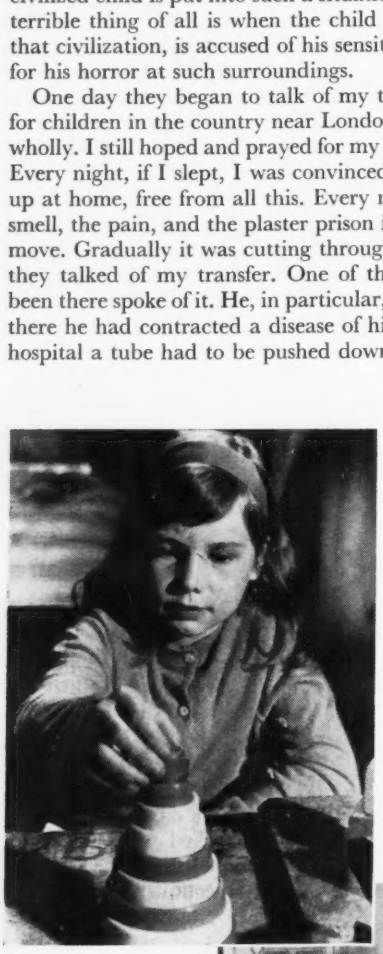
A NATIONAL SPASTICS SOCIETY FILM

JESSY

A FILM combining drama, enchantment and triumph to depict the reshaping of a handicapped child's life heralds a new phase in the work of the National Spastics Society—a bold 10-year experiment in human relations which aims to benefit the 40,000 spastic men, women and children in this country.

Its appeal is not for funds but for the help of everyone who can give through greater human understanding that support which spastics need in accepting and overcoming as far as possible the burden they have to live with. In Katina Noble—just ten years old this month—the producers of the film are fortunate to have found a heroine who gives a moving and utterly sincere performance of great merit. There are some charming shots in the special school, where Jessy learns self-assurance and new skills despite the limitations of her wheel-chair, and at home where she begins to share the fun and thrills of belonging to her local gang of able-bodied youngsters. This film deserves to succeed in creating understanding among the public towards handicapped people as a whole. The film will be distributed nationally as a featurette for public exhibition in cinemas all over the country.



Jessy learns to use her right hand through training and concentration on simple tasks that help to increase her independence.

Jessy is here being introduced to her fellow-pupils at the school for spastic children by the teacher, played by Donald Houston. Katina Noble—a normal child of ten—plays the name-part with great skill and understanding.

This 30-minute film—a pilot venture of the National Spastics Society—is the first of a series of cinema and television films which seek to educate the public to a greater acceptance of spastics—and indeed handicapped people as a whole.

Under the Dryer

"In hospitals and hairdressing establishments hurricanes hardly ever . . ." No, this is not a Higginsesque exercise in aspirates, but a musing which began under the dryer.

Apart from the little but basic difference between freedom and compulsion, one approaches hospital and hairdresser in much the same frame of mind: as your hair comes down, as you are admitted, down go your defences; you are given the uniform of a poor supplicant; you hope that you have come to a good place; you hope that it is clean, and that the people are friendly and won't do anything too drastic; you hope for reassurance; you hope to come out better than you went in. You don't want a reprimand ("Who's been cutting your hair, Madam?" "Maison Snickersnee . . ." "nnhnn . . ." As though one had confessed to a surgeon to having visited some shady struck-off osteopath in Notting Hill.) You don't want to be reminded of previous users of the basin, or previous occupiers of the bed; you don't want to be forgotten; you don't want to be chivvied; you don't necessarily want to hear the truth.

My musing started when I saw a cheerful junior assistant cowed into shamefacedness by the glowering looks of M. le Chef and his entourage of seniors. It had been her job to prepare Madam for his ministrations, and she had left a roller in Madam's hair. It was such a familiar scene—a trivial mistake, the public reprimand, the superior smile of the initiates, and the resultant sense of despair or rebellion in the probationer's—or assistant's—breast. The more I thought about it, the more like a hospital did Maison Mirabelle become. M. le Chef, with his deft, theatrical manner, creating tensions round him by his very presence, clearly close kin to old What's-his-name (M.S., F.R.C.S.). And those two popsies mounted on pin heels and wearing magenta tabliers, the icicle blonde and the husky-dusky thunder-cloud, they are clearly the staff nurses of the establishment. I hope their 'powers of leadership' and 'ability to inspire their juniors' are greater than it would appear, for there is no sign of sister on the scene.

Ha! Drama! Madam's bouffant style is in trouble over there! They're all gathering round (is she a very ill or a very important patient?) and I can't see anything at all of Madam or her all-important head. I am fascinated by the choreographic display. From his lunges it seems that M. le Chef is fencing now, and his Italianate toes are as much part of the performance as his lithe fingers. A pair of rather more Anglo-Saxon feet stand firmly by, and several pairs of pin-heels spindle round. Madam's own fur-booted feet slump against the rails of her chair.

It is all absurdly reminiscent of a night when, as a very young and unenthusiastic pupil midwife, I was summoned to 'watch twins' at around 2 a.m., and all I was in a position to watch was the rich variety of footwear that was represented at that strange assembly: impeccable Kiwi-style brown (the consultant), de-studded climbing boots (the registrar), dull regulation blacks (us), single-thong sandals (the Lebanese house-man), and under the delivery bed, a splendid, unoccupied pair of sheepskin bedroom slippers. The choreography and the fencing on that occasion were not so deft.

When a hairdresser says to me, as they nearly always do, "You know, I always wanted to be a nurse", I make the trite reply, "You never know, perhaps you will be," or "You'd find it very interesting," but some time I mean to say, "But you practically are—you help people and wait on them. You're doing a job that requires skill and experience, a job that many nurses couldn't do, and whether we're taking out stitches or putting in pins, we're dealing with the same people."

"Yes, thank you, I like what you've done at the back, but I still don't think I'm quite the beehive type."

S. Harvey.

NURSING PUBLICITY

Publicity for nursing recruitment goes on the whole year round, all over the country, in order that the profession may be constantly replenished and re-invigorated with new young blood. On the right we show Brenda Gibson, staff nurse and Pamela Frank, student nurse, from Hull Royal Infirmary, on duty at a recruiting stand recently displayed at one of the large stores in the town. At Bedford, a poster competition was held in connection with a nursing exhibition at the Corn Exchange, and our picture (by courtesy of the Bedfordshire Times) shows Miss J. P. Smith, matron of Bedford General Hospital, examining some of the entries.

SHORTAGE OF TUTORS

MADAM.—What has happened to your tutor correspondents? When I was a young nurse, the sister tutor had countless jobs to do, as well as teaching, but she was the happiest and most vital member of the community.

I began teaching 20 years ago and many changes have come our way—more than we hoped for! Today, we have a PTS for every school, a study day or block system of study. We no longer have to teach nurses who have already worked a 12-hour night. We can have most evenings free. We can live in or out of hospital and we have a good salary.

What more do we want and what is wrong? We say that teaching is hard because nurses who live outside hospital have less interest in their studies. Of course no other country accepts the idea of non-resident student nurses. The syllabus has changed amazingly in 20 years. It is hard to believe that many who demand so much anatomy, physiology, chemistry and physics were taught by Miss Félice Norton's minute textbook, and made fine nurses withal! One day when we see sense and no longer follow the Headmistresses Association, the Scandinavians, the WHO, the International Council, the Americans and Uncle Tom Cobley and all—we shall come to teach English nurses for English needs, and the outlook will be more settled.

Some folks would like all nurse entrants to have the GCE with passes in five subjects. If great numbers came, should we be able to make nurses of them? Not necessarily! The love, humour, tenacity, tolerance and physical stamina that we need in a young woman who enters nursing cannot be assessed by any educational examination yet contrived.

Those nurses among us who can teach, do teach, and we must teach or we shall not be happy! We must teach in classrooms because there are not, and never have been, enough of us to go round. It is absurd to suggest clinical teachers, where the students are taught individually, when teachers are so hard to come by. By all means let us visit the wards. Let us keep close contact with the ward sister and let us work with her. If the ward sister never spoke a word she would still, by example, be the one who teaches the HOW of nursing. Outside the ward, we teach the WHY and the IF and the MAY BE.

To young nurse teachers I offer this advice which I have tried myself: when teaching loses its satisfaction go back to the wards to work. If you have no responsibilities, go abroad and work at the bedside in another country. You will come back home and teach better because you will know the richness of your own nursing heritage. The older nurse who does not wish to move from her hospital can do as I have done more recently—go on night duty in place of or in addition to the night sister, and let your own nurses teach you.

And if you do not go back to teaching refreshed do not go back to teaching!

SISTER TUTOR.

MADAM.—From recent letters it would appear that the tutors in this hospital have a much more interesting and varied life than in most training schools.

We are not made to feel like staff nurses. The principal tutor works with us and not above us; work is delegated and all share the responsibility of training the students. We work as a team and each of us is expected to be capable of relieving the other.

As for being cut off from the wards, the ward sisters and male charge nurses invite us to visit patients of special interest with a group of student nurses, when this will not harm the patient in any way. This co-operation is seen and felt throughout the hospital. Consultants, too, discuss patients with us.

We work with the preliminary training school students in the wards, after they have been shown a procedure and performed this, where possible, on each other.

Our attitude toward the students is a human one; discipline is maintained but we do not feel, and I hope we are not, 'school-marms'.

The patient is still the centre of our work, and classroom instruction must be linked with the patient to be of value. Nurses are encouraged to tell tutors of relevant work in the ward and the whole class, including the tutor, profit by it.

No—we are not unhappy or frustrated in our work; all we need is more time for teaching and more students to teach. I am sure if these links between the bedside and the classroom existed in all hospitals the shortage of tutors would be overcome.

UNMARRIED MOTHERS

MADAM.—Referring to Mrs. Rayner's article (Nursing Times, February 12) may heaven forbid that this country should ever stoop so low as to legalize abortions.

The cases she describes are, indeed, tragic, and unfortunately increasing in number, but the old saying 'two wrongs will never make a right' was never more true than it is in this respect. The unfortunate girl who finds herself in this condition, probably through ignorance, lack of moral teaching and self-discipline, or any other reason, should surely be helped in every possible way, without seeking to destroy the child who from the moment of conception is a living being, with the right to live.

What is the human race coming to? First we have birth control by the use of contraceptives, which is morally wrong; then we hear of the use of birth control pills as a practical way to combat the alarming surge of world population—equally wrong. Now a change in the law is suggested, making properly performed therapeutic abortion available to those unhappy girls who discover themselves to be pregnant.

Marriage was instituted and sanctified by God, not merely for indulgence in passion and satisfaction, but for the procreation of the human race, and parents have a moral responsibility to their children. If this responsibility were taken more seriously, we should, no doubt, find fewer girls in trouble.

MADAM.—I read with interest Claire Rayner's article 'Have you been asked?' My adamant advice to all nurses when faced with this 64-dollar question or marital problems is listen sympathetically and then firmly guide the person to the organizations dealing with those problems, that is, The National Council for the Unmarried Mother and her Child, the Family Planning Association and the Marriage Guidance Council.

If some of our weaker sisters forget the causes of pregnancy then there are plenty of organizations ready to help them. It is not for individual nurses to take on responsibilities or give advice which may not be taken.

Those of us in industry have learnt the wisdom of passing this buck and are often reminded of Kipling's lines:

"If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools."

It may be sad to see the distress and unhappiness of a worried and frightened girl but don't forget our professional reputations can also be wrecked by these people.

STUDENTS' SPECIAL

A carefree open-air HOLIDAY in the SCOTTISH HIGHLANDS . . . you learn to ride—and to love the sturdy, sure-footed HILL PONIES from a Famous Stable . . . .

A Pony Trekking Holiday

Strung out across the hillside: a party from the Castle Hotel, Glendevon, Perthshire.

If you would like a holiday that is different, why not join a pony trekking holiday in Scotland? Here you will find beauty of scenery that is hard to surpass. You will be taken right away from your everyday bothers and worries. You couldn't have a more complete change.

You need to be a country lover, and indeed, a pony lover, as you will have your own pony throughout the holiday, and be out in the open all day. These ponies are lovely animals, friendly, sure-footed and know well the country through which you will travel. You will learn to love your pony, and he to know you, as you do everything for him during your holiday. Don't worry if you have never ridden before as you will probably find that no one else has either!

On your first Saturday evening, you will meet the rest of your party and your guide. Parties are kept small, so that the maximum attention can be given to each rider. The guide will explain what you have to do. You will also be taught how to tie knots in rope so that you can tie your pony up when you stop for lunch. On Sunday morning, you will be taken to the fields to collect your pony and shown how to catch him. You then learn how to feed him, groom him and saddle him. Then the great moment arrives when you are shown how to mount and are taken for your first ride.

This entails walking and trotting around a field. When everyone is feeling confident, you are taken for a short walk. Each day's outing is then gradually increased. The outings take you through beautiful countryside by otherwise unmanageable paths and tracks to remote parts with magnificent views. You return each day at about tea time, feed and groom your pony and turn him loose again in his own field.

All in the day's trek. Fording a river is part of the fun; the ponies seem to think so too.

It is not necessary to have full riding kit. A warm pair of slacks will do very well; you'll probably find everyone else wearing the same. (A pair of skin-fitting wool panties worn under them would prevent saddle-soreness!) Warm woollies are advisable and a windcheater. Also take a macintosh. Stout shoes with flat heels are absolutely essential. If you have a rucksack, take it with you, as you carry a picnic lunch each day and it is useful for carrying macintosh and woollies.

Scottish treks are sponsored by the Scottish Council of Physical Recreation, the pioneers of this form of holiday. The ponies are owned by Mr. McGregor who takes great pride in his ponies and has won many prizes with them. He himself also joins some of the treks, and sometimes, too, he will join the holiday-makers at the hotel in the evenings. In the relaxed and friendly atmosphere of cocktail bar or lounge he will keep everyone entertained by his tales of the locality and of the exploits of his beloved ponies.

V.W., S.R.N.

Dismounted for a picnic lunch, appetites are hearty after a morning's riding. Standing with pony is Mr. Hugh McGregor, of Ballinton, who supplies ponies from his celebrated stud for these treks.

In this article in her interesting Series about PATH. LAB. PROCEDURES, the author gives a fascinating account of different methods in carrying out PREGNANCY TESTS.

Mrs. Luckcock searches for spermatozoa under the microscope. There are often reasons, both medical and social, why a pregnancy test should be carried out.

Behind the Scenes in the PATH. LAB.

By Eveline D. Luckcock, F.I.M.L.T.

TAKING a sample of urine to the Path. Lab. one day, Susan Brown, a student nurse, saw on the label that a pregnancy test was required. "Just imagine," thought Susan, "within 14 days after the first day of a missed period, it is possible to tell whether a woman is pregnant. It seems almost like magic." Susan determined to ask how pregnancy tests were done, when she got to the laboratory.

Mary Williams, a technician in the Clin. Path. department, took Susan up to the 'animal house'. Here she was shown several tanks in which large and incredibly ugly toads splashed about. "How would you like to catch those and inject them?" Mary asked. "Ugh!" shuddered Susan, "No thanks, I'd rather not if you don't mind."

"Well, now that you have seen the toads, let's go back to the lab., and I will tell you how pregnancy tests are done.

"There are several methods, using different animals," Mary explained, "and they all rely on the fact that the urine of a pregnant woman contains a hormone which, when injected into various laboratory animals, stimulates their sex organs. This hormone, called the chorionic gonadotropic hormone, is excreted within a few weeks of fertilization, and is found in the largest quantity in early-morning urine. So whichever type of pregnancy test is done, it is essential to collect only early-morning urine; about 3 fluid ozs. are required.

"Our method—using toads—is called the Hogben Test, and those toads are female South African ones. Their correct name, by the way, is Xenopus laevis. As you saw, they were all swimming about, and one of the difficulties about this test is, first of all to catch the toads, and then to hold on to them! They are wet and slippery, and can jump several feet in one bound! The mature females lay their eggs only after mating, or after artificial stimulation by the gonadotropic hormone of pregnancy. We treat the urine chemically to concentrate the hormone, and inject about 2 ml. into the dorsal sac, which lies under the loose skin on the back of the toad. Thousands of eggs, looking somewhat like frog spawn, are laid within 24 hours, if the test is positive.

"There is a second toad test," continued Mary, "which avoids the difficulty of wet toads. Male toads, the Bufo vulgaris, are used, either British or Continental types. These are land-living and have a dry skin. Normally, of course, male toads produce spermatozoa only when mating, but they will also do this after an injection of urine from a pregnant woman. As before, the urine is injected into the dorsal sac, then after four hours, the toad is carefully catheterised, using a fine glass pipette. The fluid obtained is examined under the microscope, and this is repeated hourly. If spermatozoa are produced in this time, the test is positive. If no spermatozoa are produced by then, the test is usually negative, although in cold weather, especially, it may take up to 12 hours for the spermatozoa to appear".

"Isn't there an 'Ascheim-Zondek' pregnancy test?" asked Susan.

"There certainly is," replied Mary. "It was the first pregnancy test to be devised, and, although this, and a similar method called the Friedman Test, are still used today they are being replaced by the toad techniques. You see, the original methods using mice and rabbits involved killing the animals; whereas the toads may be used repeatedly. And not only that, more skill is required to interpret the Ascheim-Zondek and Friedman Tests. However, I'll tell you how they are done.

"Five immature female mice are used in the Ascheim-Zondek Test. Each mouse has a different quantity of urine injected subcutaneously, and after about 100 hours they are killed. If the test is positive, the ovaries become enlarged, and little yellow protrusions appear on their surfaces. Often the uterus is also enlarged.

"Friedman modified the Ascheim-Zondek Test. Instead of using five mice, he found the test is just as reliable if a single, non-pregnant rabbit is injected with the urine containing the pregnancy hormone. And changes can be seen in the ovaries within 24 hours."

Having explained something of the various ways of doing a pregnancy test, Mary went on to explain why such tests are sometimes needed. "Of course, it is important to the couple concerned to know if they are going to have a baby, but this is by no means the only reason why such tests are undertaken. Sometimes, if a woman has conceived, it is in her interest, medically, for the pregnancy to be terminated immediately. Sometimes special care is needed, as in the case of habitual abortion, or possibly the test is done to disprove a pregnancy in a woman beginning the menopause. If a woman, who is proved to be pregnant, suddenly gives a negative pregnancy test it usually means that the foetus is dead. In the somewhat rare event of an ectopic pregnancy, there is a 50-50 chance of the test being either positive or negative.

"Occasionally, conditions besides that of pregnancy will give a positive result. A non-pregnant woman with a hydatiform mole or a chorionic epithelioma may be excreting the gonadotropic hormone. In this case the test can be modified to help the clinician in his diagnosis.

"It has also been found that men suffering from testicular tumours sometimes excrete the gonadotropic hormone and give a positive pregnancy test!"

Thanking Mary for her interesting explanation, Susan went back to the ward thinking that the more one knew of medical matters the less straightforward they were. "Still," thought Susan, "I can see that having a pregnancy test done can obviously be a very great help in diagnosis, provided you know the limitations of the test."

In Parliament

Patients' Money Mr. Dodds (Erith and Crayford) asked the Minister of Health on February 15 for a statement in respect of the investigation into the deficiency in the accounts for patients' money at the De la Pole Mental Hospital.

Mr. Walker-Smith.—The police and auditors' investigations are still proceeding, and all I can say at present is that two members of the nursing staff have been convicted at Hull Magistrates Court for offences relating to the deficiency in patients' money.

Mr. Dodds said he had complained bitterly on a number of occasions in the past about the slackness in some mental hospitals in dealing with patients' money. Was the Minister satisfied that the best systems were introduced to obviate this sort of thing as far as possible, and to give the patients a deeper sense of justice in financial matters?

Mr. Walker-Smith.—My auditors are considering, in conjunction with the hospital management committee, further steps which can be taken to minimize the risk of any such occurrence in future.

Hospital Cadets Mrs. Castle (Blackburn) asked the Minister on February 15 whether, in view of the fact that hospital cadets had had no increase in pay since 1957, despite the award to nurses in March 1959, he would amend the maximum scales of pay for such staff in order to enable regional hospital boards to increase their salaries.

Mr. Walker-Smith.—I have this matter under consideration.

Mrs. Castle.—Is the Minister aware that it has been the normal practice up to now for the hospital cadets to receive an increase when the nurses receive one, but that they missed the last increase which the nurses received? Would the Minister give this further and sympathetic consideration, because this is an excellent way of recruiting to nursing?

Mr. Walker-Smith.—I understand that there is not an automatic link between the movements in the pay of cadets and those in the pay of nurses, but I will certainly check the history of the matter. I entirely agree that these girls do excellent work.

Migraine Mr. J. Rankin (Glasgow, Govan) asked the Minister of Health on February 8 to appoint a committee to inquire into the cause and treatment of migraine.

Mr. Walker-Smith.—Migraine is a severe form of headache and a good deal of research is in progress with a view to throwing light on the cause and treatment of the various forms of headache, but I do not think that this would be advanced by the appointment of a committee.

Mr. Rankin.—Is the Minister aware that there are many people who reject entirely his statement that migraine is a severe form of headache? Will he think about this again? Does he realize that there are five million people who suffer from this illness, and there is no generally accepted treatment because nobody yet knows the cause?

Mr. Walker-Smith.—Migraine is a very distressing condition, and I certainly have the greatest sympathy for those who suffer from it. Treatment is available through family doctors and consultant neurologists within the NHS.

Mr. Rankin.—Somebody is deceiving the Minister.

Mr. Walker-Smith.—Research is going on, but we must not fall into the error of thinking that the appointment of a committee is an automatic advancement of knowledge in these technical matters.

More Money for NHS The Spring Civil and Revenue Supplementary Estimates 1959/60 published on February 3 amounted to £76,400,000, in which the National Health Service constituted the largest single item of increased expenditure. An additional £25,600,000 is required to cover the increased cost of the service in England, Wales and Scotland. Of this amount, general hospital services are likely to cost £17,500,000 more than was originally estimated due mainly to salary and wage increases. At the same time, the cost of the pharmaceutical service shows a rise of £5,900,000 attributable to both an increase in the number of prescriptions and a higher unit cost.

BOOK REVIEWS

Enuresis or Bed-wetting. Franklin Bicknell, D.M. Heinemann Medical Books, 7s. 6d.

This handbook epitomizes an expert's views on this difficult and distressing subject. In less than 100 pages Dr. Bicknell discusses the subject from every possible angle in a balanced, impartial manner.

This book is addressed to doctors and parents and should prove a valuable guide to both; perhaps its comprehensive character might make it indigestible and possibly alarming to the average parent, with even the further possibility of danger, if the chapter on medical treatment with details of drugs and dosages were used as a substitute for the seeking of medical aid. Finally, Dr. Bicknell is to be congratulated on the very fine list of references he has given—167 in all!

Day by Day. A guide to prayer for the Church Overseas. Peter Ruffle. The Highway Press, 1s. 3d.

Why should I pray? What is prayer? How do I set about it? Tell me about intercession. If these questions have at any time occupied your thoughts, this little book offers practical answers.

The second half is concerned with daily prayer for some special part of the world where the Church Missionary Society is in action—prayers with a high degree of understanding.

Preliminary Home Nursing. St. John Ambulance Association, 2s. 6d.

Miss L. J. Ottley, formerly matron of Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge, and a past president of the Royal College of Nursing, has written this manual for the St. John Ambulance Association. It is intended principally for junior members and is simply and clearly written and profusely illustrated with clear and attractive sketches. Its distinguished author expresses her hope, in the foreword, that it may not only help in training in the principles of home nursing, and prove of value in the home in time of need, but that it may also awaken an interest in nursing in those who read it, perhaps even pointing the way towards a nursing career in the future.

E.E.P.

Nobody Need be Fat. Robert Kemp, M.D., M.R.C.P. Heinemann Medical Books, 12s. 6d.

The subject of this book has universal appeal! Writing for the lay public and dealing with obesity from every aspect, the author, a physician, claims that he is not an expert in dietetics; one criticism of the book is that he is hardly fair to the dietitian, who is.

His approach is unorthodox. While admitting we are overweight because we overeat, he stresses that some people fail adequately to dispose of surplus. A whole chapter is devoted to the fat child, a modern problem.

The diet recommended, high protein, low carbohydrate and moderate fat, is one that could really be followed and enjoyed. Its chief drawback, its expense, is clearly faced.

The book is full of common sense and interestingly written, although it is irritating in parts and at times the English is poor. It will be of interest and help to those who can be described as 'potentially overweight' as well as to those who actually are.

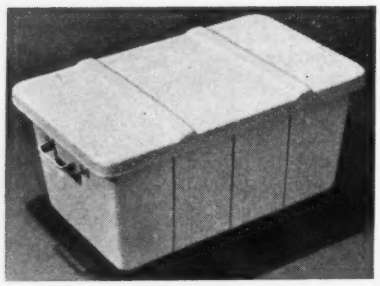
Gadgets for the Paralysed

The 'Gadget Leaflets' published by the National Association for the Paralysed are now available as a bound volume. The devices in these 11 leaflets make life easier for people with residual paralysis after a stroke or injury, and help them to be independent of others. There are page-turners for the bookish, a remote control clothes line for the housewife, aids to mobility, aids in the bathroom and toilet, an adjustable hoe for the gardener, and a wide range of other devices. Makers' names are given and in many instances the price is quoted.

The leaflets are available through the association (1, York Street, Baker Street, London, W.1), 1s. each or 10s. for the bound set, plus 6d. for postage and packing. They are not sold to disabled people but are designed for the use of those responsible for the care of the physically handicapped.

A PLASTIC LAUNDRY SKIP has been developed. It is easily steam-sterilized, cannot harbour bacteria, is extremely light and gives complete weather protection—also it should reduce noise.



New Inquiry on Medicines

The composition of the working party set up "to review the legislative provisions which relate to the control of medicinal substances and to recommend what changes should be made to rationalize and simplify the law" was recently announced in Parliament. It consists of 12 officials from the Government departments mainly concerned, of whom two have medical, three legal, and two pharmaceutical qualifications. The inquiry will presumably cover the workings of the Dangerous Drugs, Poisons, and Therapeutic Substances Acts, as well as the desirability of controlling substances not at present subject to legal restriction. The Royal College of Nursing has been invited to submit evidence.

News from Denmark

Limiting Prescriptions

All general practitioners are to receive a letter from the Ministry of Health asking them to limit the quantities of drugs they prescribe to not more than one week's supply except in chronic or other exceptional cases. This is in accord with the recommendations of the recent Committee on the Cost of Prescribing (the Hinchliffe Committee), and follows discussions between the Ministry and the British Medical Association, who have agreed to the circular being sent out.

NASEAN Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of branch delegates of the National Association of State Enrolled Assistant Nurses will be held at the Winter Gardens, Blackpool, on Wednesday, March 9. Discussion will include legal aid for NASEAN members and remedying the apparently widespread ignorance among State-registered nurses of assistant nurse training. Candidates for election to the council will be invited to outline their policies. On Tuesday, March 8, the evening before the meeting, Preston Branch will hold a dinner and dance at the Winter Gardens. Details from NASEAN, 21, Cavendish Square, London, W.1, as soon as possible please.

Civic Catering for a Hospital

Birmingham Civic Catering Department has undertaken to supply 850 meals a day for the staff and patients of Birmingham General Hospital. The board of management is still responsible for catering policy and pays for supplies and wages of staff, but the civic catering authority orders food supplies and the employment of key staff is in its hands. Several other hospitals are trying similar experiments, but this is an innovation for Birmingham, and is a mark of readiness to adopt new methods in an effort to solve today's problems. Such an experiment will no doubt be watched with interest by other hospital authorities.

Council Meeting, February 1960

THE COUNCIL of the Royal College of Nursing met on Thursday, February 18, with Mrs. A. A. Woodman in the chair.

One of the most important items in the business of the day was the proposal that certain amendments should be made to the Royal Charter. A number of resolutions proposing amendments both to certain articles in the Charter and to the by-laws were adopted unanimously for submission in accordance with the terms of the Charter to the membership of the College. The resolutions, which are primarily concerned with the proposal to extend College membership, will be placed before the members at an extraordinary general meeting to be held at 10 a.m. on June 23.

The Council also approved suggested arrangements for the meeting at which all members of the College will be given the opportunity to vote on these important matters, either in person or by proxy. Every member of the College will be sent full details of the meeting, with resolutions to be considered, during March, which will give overseas members time to vote.

Representation at International Conferences

It was agreed by Council that Miss M. Cooper, tutor in the Education Department, should accept the invitation to attend a conference for directors of nursing schools at Sèvres in February. The conference was to be organized by the Comité d'Entente des Écoles d'Infirmières at l'École de Cadres de la Croix Rouge.

The 13th International Congress on Occupational Health would be held in New York from July 25-29. The programme committee had invited the Occupational Health Section to send a nurse to the congress to read a paper on the training and education of industrial nurses in Europe, offering to pay expenses. Approval was given by Council to the Section's suggestion that Miss Marjorie Simpson should undertake this. The Council also agreed to send Mrs. Gwen Doherty, the only British nurse member of the Permanent Committee of the International Association on Occupational Health, as another representative.

Education Department

The Council approved the recommendation of the Education Committee that as an experiment the Ward Sisters' Course and the Nursing Administration (Hospital) Course should be open to nurses holding the single qualification of Registered Mental Nurse or Registered Nurse for Mental Defectives.

Superannuation

It was reported that draft amendments to the superannuation regulations, following the investigation of the National Health Service Superannuation Scheme, had been received from the Ministry of Health. It was agreed that the Ministry should again be informed of the particular concern of the College at the proposal that interest should no longer be paid on contributions returned on voluntary withdrawal from the scheme. The College thought that such a proposal should not apply to those already in the scheme who had entered with the expectation of receiving interest.

The meeting ended at 6.30 p.m. The next meeting of the Council will be on March 17.

COLLEGE COUNCIL ELECTION

Election policies of candidates nominated for election to the Council of the Royal College of Nursing will be published in the Nursing Times of March 18.

Extract from a letter from one of our founder members who undertakes knitting for us: ". . . When you have some more wool, maybe you will be so kind as to keep me employed, believe me it is life to me to feel I am giving my time to help keep someone warm and when we get to this time of life that is what we need, kindness and sympathy and the wonderful feeling of being wanted and kept useful. I am afraid this cold weather finds the weak spots but Spring will so soon be here." The writer knitted over 60 ounces of wool in 1959. We still have wool for anyone who will make a warm garment. Our thanks are sent to Miss E. Bryden, Miss Hay per the North Western Metropolitan Branch, Miss Partridge, Mrs. Gusterson, and Miss Smith, for their gifts.

Cashman, secretary, reported that the Branch had representatives on the health and housing, insurance, cancer education campaign, Lord Mayor's World Refugee Year appeal, and hospital house committees. Miss Osborn, in accordance with the custom of Portsmouth Branch, retired at the end of her two years as chairman, and Miss M. Sutcliffe was elected in her place. Miss Thyer opened a discussion on the report of the Constitution Standing Committee of the National Council of Nurses; members decided to consider the matter and have a full discussion at the next meeting on March 17.

Miss Anna Neagle is to open a very special kind of shop, at the Tea Centre, Lower Regent Street, London, at 12.30 on February 29. It is the Oxfam Gift Shop (Oxford Committee for Famine Relief), and it is a combination of exhibition and shop; many of the articles on sale have been given by famous people, and include autographed books and records. Inspired by World Refugee Year, this venture stems from the well-known Oxfam Shop in Oxford which can boast a turnover of £110,000 in the past 12 years. The exhibition-shop will be open daily from February 29—March 5, from 10 to 6.30 (1 p.m. Saturday).

STAFF NURSE?

STAFF NURSES everywhere—have you your future planned? Do you know what openings lie ahead now that you are a trained nurse?

Does the mystic East, the tropical moon, the thrill of life and nursing in a foreign country appeal to you? Maybe you are interested in finding out about the great work of those who so diligently serve within the walls of the prisons; perhaps you wish to further your training by becoming a midwife—you too may one day be chosen to help to deliver a royal baby!

Or could it be that you wish to become the vital link in the hospital team, the person to whom all the nurses, patients and doctors turn when in trouble or stress—the ward sister?

Do you want to train as a health visitor, an occupational health nurse, a sister tutor?

The necessary training, the work and all that it entails will be described by serving officers of the QARANC, QARNNS, PMRAFNS, QEONS, and the Prison Nursing Service, together with members from the civilian nursing field, at the

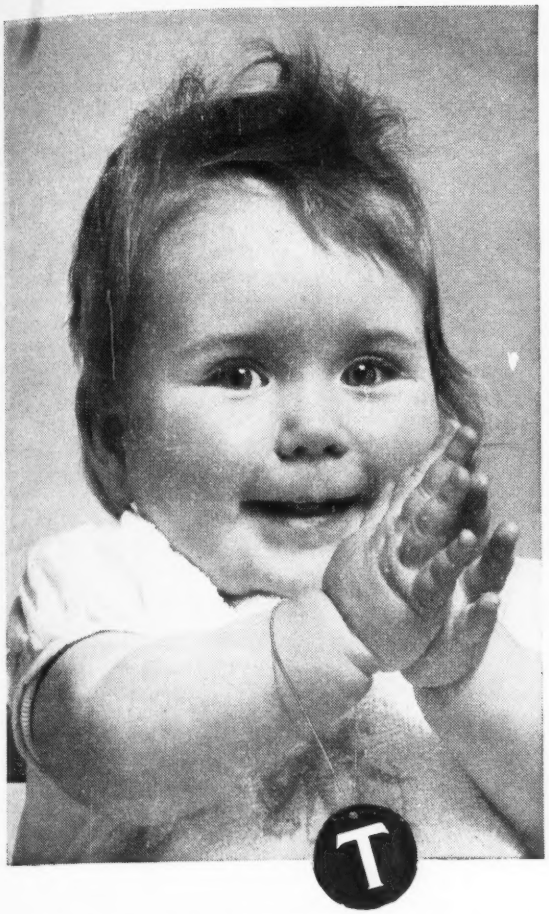
on April 6 in the Cowdray Hall.

All this experience packed into just a few hours for the mere sum of 12s. 6d.! Do come. Write now to Miss B. Turner, Royal College of Nursing, London, W.1.



A baby's first solids too often increase his intake of starches at the expense of the valuable milk proteins and minerals he still needs from milk. Trufood Cereal obviates this harmful trend by supplementing the vegetable protein with milk protein and bringing the total protein up to 6.05 gm. per ounce or 21.4%. When the baby's need for additional calories forces a revision in the ratio of liquids to solids, Trufood Cereal Food provides the simplest and most satisfactory way of doing this. It reconstitutes with milk or water to form a creamy fluid which is simple for the mother to prepare and attractive for the baby to take. Further information can be obtained from Trufood Limited, 113 Newington Causeway, London, S.E.1.

NURSE IN THE SERVICE OF THE QUEEN...

AS AN OFFICER IN

Q·A·R·A·N·C

QUEEN ALEXANDRA'S ROYAL ARMY NURSING CORPS

A PTS Tutor looks at Hospital Procedures

The author is an experienced tutor who feels that constant changes in methods and materials used in our hospitals today are confusing.

As my time is spent in the preliminary schools I am bound to keep to a fairly straight and narrow path of orthodoxy; but I do find that I must give pointers more in some directions than in others. Walking away from sickness and disease is more accentuated nowadays than walking towards it; however, one cannot stray far from the old diehard syllabuses. I will mention a few examples of how change may have taken place since earlier days.

Bedmaking. Cotton materials have often replaced woollen materials. Mesh cotton blankets may be considered as efficient as wool, and better for laundering.

Bed-stripping. The fold and lift methods may have been displaced by the fold and glide methods. I think the idea is to reduce the scattering of dust, apart from postural strain on the nurse. I am not specially convinced that the earlier methods are improved on, as in either case much depends on the actual person doing the work, and clothes can slide more easily on to the floor if they are less neatly folded.

Macintoshes. Absorbent paper pads are now in use, and I understand are effective. Apart from convenience, they may stray into the laundry. Opinion decides in favour of the use of these absorbent pads as they reduce laundering and help to prevent the spread of infection. They may become wrinkled under a restless patient, in which case they need not be used.

Hot Water Bottles. Filling must be taught, although the nurses may never see a hot water bottle used in the wards. Heating may be done by electric cradles or blankets and therefore their uses and precautions must be taught. Some doctors forbid the use of hot water bottles, but from a nursing angle no patient need ever be cold, and warm socks or a small blanket can be used rather than leave the patient cold.

Bed blocks. Uses remain much the same; elevation of the foot of the bed to increase blood pressure, or to assist circulation after venous operations. They are generally less used after abdominal operations.

Linen. Fouled linen is reduced by the use of absorbent pads. Most stores are now central, and there is a tendency to handle soiled linen less in the wards. Nurses are taught to wear washable plastic, or similar aprons when bedchanging, or individual gowns in infant wards, or when nursing isolated patients.

Nursing Care

Skin. Silicone and waterproof creams are used for incontinent patients. Methylated spirit is not used on toilet trays and trolleys. A daily blanket bath for all bedfast patients is usual.

Hair Washing. 1 per cent. Cetavlon is used; it lathers and is a good shampoo. Hairwashing may be done by the hairdresser at the patient's cost, as required.

Mouth Care

Mild antiseptic lotions are used such as glycerine and thymol or 1 per cent. sodium bicarbonate solution. There is often controversy about instruments used for mouth cleaning. Personally I like to dress artery forceps with a square of old linen or lint. It makes a good mouth cleanser and there is no risk of losing the swab inside the mouth. However, I have heard examiners say that they would fail a nurse who put artery forceps on the mouth-cleaning tray. My answer is that no surgical instrument has been invented specifically to clean the mouth, and the choice is often left to the nurse, who learns from experience what may be best to use. The blunter the forceps, the less risk of harming the patient. The day seemed to be far gone when she used a dressed finger to clean the mouth with; however, I did hear recently that this method is still used at times in some cases. Gauze has come much more into use for mouth-cleansing swabs. I do not think that it is considered to be more costly than old linen these days, and perhaps it is a better material.

Records

Reporting has been reduced to a minimum, and specially printed report books have been done away with. Patients' records are kept by the special records departments.

Drug records. Schedule 1 poisons are recorded in a special book, the dangerous drug book being maintained as before. Some ward sisters keep for their own use record books for special drugs and their dosages, including the sulpha and antibiotic drugs. Readings are taken direct from charts or prescription sheets.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is more widely used. Nurses dislike figures and tables and it is difficult for many to tackle dilution of lotions. Our pharmacist has labels printed showing strengths of lotions to be used in given circumstances, which is helpful to the staff. Phenol and carbolic lotions are not generally used in the wards. Cetavlon and Savlon are common skin antiseptics. The use of many antiseptics today depends largely on their cost, as well as their source of supply. The petrol detergents are much used. Jeyes white fluid remains a good general disinfectant.

Medications

Medicines are dispensed largely in pill and tablet form nowadays. Morphia and similar liquid drugs are dispensed in individual doses.

Surgical Techniques

Surgical techniques may vary, but we endeavour to keep to procedures agreed by our committee. Trolleys are not covered with sterile towels, but swabbed with antiseptic lotions, the lotion being the one of choice at the time. Savlon is now in general use. Instruments are arranged in their respective sterile trays as required. All techniques are non-touch. Individual dressing packs are used for all patients, and Cellophane packet sterilization is replacing the dressing drum in many instances. It has been suggested that nurses doing dressings cover their hair completely in a cotton towel or head cover, and wear a gown.

Cheatle's forceps are used for handling sterile material, and their proper use is stressed.

Many techniques and procedures used today depend on what the doctor requires, and what the patient needs; on what is in good supply; on cost, and what is favoured by the heads controlling a group of hospitals. Therefore we are adaptable.

I think cotton is still the most favoured of the natural materials for general use, both for bed materials and as cotton wool for dressings. Brown wool has recently come under fire as being an agent for bacteria. I do not know how much this has been investigated, but was told that it may be caused by long storage in unprotected places. Brown wool certainly has good uses, if only as a non-absorbing agent.

Tow has largely disappeared as a cheap article, but it also is a useful material, especially where cost is concerned. Good quality tows are obtainable if the buyers look for them. They are valuable for removing spilled excretions and can be deposited in covered dressing bins.

SHORTAGE OF TUTORS

MADAM.—What has happened to your tutor correspondents? When I was a young nurse, the sister tutor had countless jobs to do, as well as teaching, but she was the happiest and most vital member of the community.

I began teaching 20 years ago and many changes have come our way—more than we hoped for! Today, we have a PTS for every school, a study day or block system of study. We no longer have to teach nurses who have already worked a 12-hour night. We can have most evenings free. We can live in or out of hospital and we have a good salary.

What more do we want and what is wrong? We say that teaching is hard because nurses who live outside hospital have less interest in their studies. Of course no other country accepts the idea of non-resident student nurses. The syllabus has changed amazingly in 20 years. It is hard to believe that many who demand so much anatomy, physiology, chemistry and physics were taught by Miss Félice Norton's minute textbook, and made fine nurses withal! One day when we see sense and no longer follow the Headmistresses Association, the Scandinavians, the WHO, the International Council, the Americans and Uncle Tom Cobley and all—we shall come to teach English nurses for English needs, and the outlook will be more settled.

Some folks would like all nurse entrants to have the GCE with passes in five subjects. If great numbers came, should we be able to make nurses of them? Not necessarily! The love, humour, tenacity, tolerance and physical stamina that we need in a young woman who enters nursing cannot be assessed by any educational examination yet contrived.

Those nurses among us who can teach, do teach, and we must teach or we shall not be happy! We must teach in classrooms because there are not, and never have been, enough of us to go round. It is absurd to suggest clinical teachers, where the students are taught individually, when teachers are so hard to come by. By all means let us visit the wards. Let us keep close contact with the ward sister and let us work with her. If the ward sister never spoke a word she would still, by example, be the one who teaches the HOW of nursing. Outside the ward, we teach the WHY and the IF and the MAY BE.

To young nurse teachers I offer this advice which I have tried myself: when teaching loses its satisfaction go back to the wards to work. If you have no responsibilities, go abroad and work at the bedside in another country. You will come back home and teach better because you will know the richness of your own nursing heritage. The older nurse who does not wish to move from her hospital can do as I have done more recently—go on night duty in place of or in addition to the night sister, and let your own nurses teach you.

And if you do not go back to teaching refreshed do not go back to teaching!

SISTER TUTOR.

Birmingham.

MADAM.—From recent letters it would appear that the tutors in this hospital have a much more interesting and varied life than in most training schools.

We are not made to feel like staff nurses. The principal tutor works with us and not above us; work is delegated and all share the responsibility of training the students. We work as a team and each of us is expected to be capable of relieving the other.

As for being cut off from the wards, the ward sisters and male charge nurses invite us to visit patients of special interest with a group of student nurses, when this will not harm the patient in any way. This co-operation is seen and felt throughout the hospital. Consultants, too, discuss patients with us.

We work with the preliminary training school students in the wards, after they have been shown a procedure and performed this, where possible, on each other.

Our attitude toward the students is a human one; discipline is maintained but we do not feel, and I hope we are not, 'school-marms'.

The patient is still the centre of our work, and classroom instruction must be linked with the patient to be of value. Nurses are encouraged to tell tutors of relevant work in the ward and the whole class, including the tutor, profit by it.

No—we are not unhappy or frustrated in our work; all we need is more time for teaching and more students to teach. I am sure if these links between the bedside and the classroom existed in all hospitals the shortage of tutors would be overcome.

UNMARRIED MOTHERS

MADAM.—Referring to Mrs. Rayner's article (Nursing Times, February 12) may heaven forbid that this country should ever stoop so low as to legalize abortions.

The cases she describes are, indeed, tragic, and unfortunately increasing in number, but the old saying 'two wrongs will never make a right' was never more true than it is in this respect. The unfortunate girl who finds herself in this condition, probably through ignorance, lack of moral teaching and self-discipline, or any other reason, should surely be helped in every possible way, without seeking to destroy the child who from the moment of conception is a living being, with the right to live.

What is the human race coming to? First we have birth control by the use of contraceptives, which is morally wrong; then we hear of the use of birth control pills as a practical way to combat the alarming surge of world population—equally wrong. Now a change in the law is suggested, making properly performed therapeutic abortion available to those unhappy girls who discover themselves to be pregnant.

Marriage was instituted and sanctified by God, not merely for indulgence in passion and satisfaction, but for the procreation of the human race, and parents have a moral responsibility to their children. If this responsibility were taken more seriously, we should, no doubt, find fewer girls in trouble.

I. M. STERLINI.

Middlesex.

MADAM.—I read with interest Claire Rayner's article 'Have you been asked?' My adamant advice to all nurses when faced with this 64-dollar question or marital problems is listen sympathetically and then firmly guide the person to the organizations dealing with those problems, that is, The National Council for the Unmarried Mother and her Child, the Family Planning Association and the Marriage Guidance Council.

If some of our weaker sisters forget the causes of pregnancy then there are plenty of organizations ready to help them. It is not for individual nurses to take on responsibilities or give advice which may not be taken.

Those of us in industry have learnt the wisdom of passing this buck and are often reminded of Kipling's lines:

"If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools."

It may be sad to see the distress and unhappiness of a worried and frightened girl but don't forget our professional reputations can also be wrecked by these people.

A carefree open-air HOLIDAY in the SCOTTISH HIGHLANDS . . . you learn to ride—and to love the sturdy, sure-footed HILL PONIES from a Famous Stable . . . .

STUDENTS' SPECIAL

A Pony Trekking Holiday

Strung out across the hillside: a party from the Castle Hotel, Glendevon, Perthshire.

All in the day's trek. Fording a river is part of the fun; the ponies seem to think so too.

If you would like a holiday that is different, why not join a pony trekking holiday in Scotland? Here you will find beauty of scenery that is hard to surpass. You will be taken right away from your everyday bothers and worries. You couldn't have a more complete change.

You need to be a country lover, and indeed, a pony lover, as you will have your own pony throughout the holiday, and be out in the open all day. These ponies are lovely animals, friendly, sure-footed and know well the country through which you will travel. You will learn to love your pony, and he to know you, as you do everything for him during your holiday. Don't worry if you have never ridden before as you will probably find that no one else has either!

On your first Saturday evening, you will meet the rest of your party and your guide. Parties are kept small, so that the maximum attention can be given to each rider. The guide will explain what you have to do. You will also be taught how to tie knots in rope so that you can tie your pony up when you stop for lunch. On Sunday morning, you will be taken to the fields to collect your pony and shown how to catch him. You then learn how to feed him, groom him and saddle him. Then the great moment arrives when you are shown how to mount and are taken for your first ride.

This entails walking and trotting around a field. When everyone is feeling confident, you are taken for a short walk. Each day's outing is then gradually increased. The outings take you through beautiful countryside by otherwise unmanageable paths and tracks to remote parts with magnificent views. You return each day at about tea time, feed and groom your pony and turn him loose again in his own field.

It is not necessary to have full riding kit. A warm pair of slacks will do very well; you'll probably find everyone else wearing the same. (A pair of skin-fitting wool panties worn under them would prevent saddle-soreness!) Warm woollies are advisable and a windcheater. Also take a macintosh. Stout shoes with flat heels are absolutely essential. If you have a rucksack, take it with you, as you carry a picnic lunch each day and it is useful for carrying macintosh and woollies.

Scottish treks are sponsored by the Scottish Council of Physical Recreation, the pioneers of this form of holiday. The ponies are owned by Mr. McGregor who takes great pride in his ponies and has won many prizes with them. He himself also joins some of the treks, and sometimes, too, he will join the holidaymakers at the hotel in the evenings. In the relaxed and friendly atmosphere of cocktail bar or lounge he will keep everyone entertained by his tales of the locality and of the exploits of his beloved ponies.

V.W., S.R.N.

Dismounted for a picnic lunch, appetites are hearty after a morning's riding. Standing with pony is Mr. Hugh McGregor, of Ballinton, who supplies ponies from his celebrated stud for these treks.

Mrs. Luckcock searches for spermatozoa under the microscope. There are often reasons, both medical and social, why a pregnancy test should be carried out.

In this article in her interesting Series about PATH. LAB. PROCEDURES, the author gives a fascinating account of different methods in carrying out PREGNANCY TESTS.

Behind the Scenes in the PATH. LAB.

By Eveline D. Luckcock, F.I.M.L.T.

TAKING a sample of urine to the Path. Lab. one day, Susan Brown, a student nurse, saw on the label that a pregnancy test was required. "Just imagine," thought Susan, "within 14 days after the first day of a missed period, it is possible to tell whether a woman is pregnant. It seems almost like magic." Susan determined to ask how pregnancy tests were done, when she got to the laboratory.

Mary Williams, a technician in the Clin. Path. department, took Susan up to the 'animal house'. Here she was shown several tanks in which large and incredibly ugly toads splashed about. "How would you like to catch those and inject them?" Mary asked. "Ugh!" shuddered Susan, "No thanks, I'd rather not if you don't mind."

"Well, now that you have seen the toads, let's go back to the lab., and I will tell you how pregnancy tests are done.

"There are several methods, using different animals," Mary explained, "and they all rely on the fact that the urine of a pregnant woman contains a hormone which, when injected into various laboratory animals, stimulates their sex organs. This hormone, called the chorionic gonadotropic hormone, is excreted within a few weeks of fertilization, and is found in the largest quantity in early-morning urine. So whichever type of pregnancy test is done, it is essential to collect only early-morning urine; about 3 fluid ozs. are required.

"Our method—using toads—is called the Hogben Test, and those toads are female South African ones. Their correct name, by the way, is Xenopus laevis. As you saw, they were all swimming about, and one of the difficulties about this test is, first of all to catch the toads, and then to hold on to them! They are wet and slippery, and can jump several feet in one bound! The mature females lay their eggs only after mating, or after artificial stimulation by the gonadotropic hormone of pregnancy. We treat the urine chemically to concentrate the hormone, and inject about 2 ml. into the dorsal sac, which lies under the loose skin on the back of the toad. Thousands of eggs, looking somewhat like frog spawn, are laid within 24 hours, if the test is positive.

"There is a second toad test," continued Mary, "which avoids the difficulty of wet toads. Male toads, the Bufo vulgaris, are used, either British or Continental types. These are land-living and have a dry skin. Normally, of course, male toads produce spermatozoa only when mating, but they will also do this after an injection of urine from a pregnant woman. As before, the urine is injected into the dorsal sac, then after four hours, the toad is carefully catheterised, using a fine glass pipette. The fluid obtained is examined under the microscope, and this is repeated hourly. If spermatozoa are produced in this time, the test is positive. If no spermatozoa are produced by then, the test is usually negative, although in cold weather, especially, it may take up to 12 hours for the spermatozoa to appear".

"Isn't there an 'Ascheim-Zondek' pregnancy test?" asked Susan.

"There certainly is," replied Mary. "It was the first pregnancy test to be devised, and, although this, and a similar method called the Friedman Test, are still used today they are being replaced by the toad techniques. You see, the original methods using mice and rabbits involved killing the animals; whereas the toads may be used repeatedly. And not only that, more skill is required to interpret the Ascheim-Zondek and Friedman Tests. However, I'll tell you how they are done.

"Five immature female mice are used in the Ascheim-Zondek Test. Each mouse has a different quantity of urine injected subcutaneously, and after about 100 hours they are killed. If the test is positive, the ovaries become enlarged, and little yellow protrusions appear on their surfaces. Often the uterus is also enlarged.

"Friedman modified the Ascheim-Zondek Test. Instead of using five mice, he found the test is just as reliable if a single, non-pregnant rabbit is injected with the urine containing the pregnancy hormone. And changes can be seen in the ovaries within 24 hours."

Having explained something of the various ways of doing a pregnancy test, Mary went on to explain why such tests are sometimes needed. "Of course, it is important to the couple concerned to know if they are going to have a baby, but this is by no means the only reason why such tests are undertaken. Sometimes, if a woman has conceived, it is in her interest, medically, for the pregnancy to be terminated immediately. Sometimes special care is needed, as in the case of habitual abortion, or possibly the test is done to disprove a pregnancy in a woman beginning the menopause. If a woman, who is proved to be pregnant, suddenly gives a negative pregnancy test it usually means that the foetus is dead. In the somewhat rare event of an ectopic pregnancy, there is a 50-50 chance of the test being either positive or negative.

"Occasionally, conditions besides that of pregnancy will give a positive result. A non-pregnant woman with a hydatiform mole or a chorionic epithelioma may be excreting the gonadotropic hormone. In this case the test can be modified to help the clinician in his diagnosis.

"It has also been found that men suffering from testicular tumours sometimes excrete the gonadotropic hormone and give a positive pregnancy test!"

Thanking Mary for her interesting explanation, Susan went back to the ward thinking that the more one knew of medical matters the less straightforward they were. "Still," thought Susan, "I can see that having a pregnancy test done can obviously be a very great help in diagnosis, provided you know the limitations of the test."

In Parliament

Patients' Money Mr. Dodds (Erith and Crayford) asked the Minister of Health on February 15 for a statement in respect of the investigation into the deficiency in the accounts for patients' money at the De la Pole Mental Hospital.

Mr. Walker-Smith.—The police and auditors' investigations are still proceeding, and all I can say at present is that two members of the nursing staff have been convicted at Hull Magistrates Court for offences relating to the deficiency in patients' money.

Mr. Dodds said he had complained bitterly on a number of occasions in the past about the slackness in some mental hospitals in dealing with patients' money. Was the Minister satisfied that the best systems were introduced to obviate this sort of thing as far as possible, and to give the patients a deeper sense of justice in financial matters?

Mr. Walker-Smith.—My auditors are considering, in conjunction with the hospital management committee, further steps which can be taken to minimize the risk of any such occurrence in future.

Hospital Cadets Mrs. Castle (Blackburn) asked the Minister on February 15 whether, in view of the fact that hospital cadets had had no increase in pay since 1957, despite the award to nurses in March 1959, he would amend the maximum scales of pay for such staff in order to enable regional hospital boards to increase their salaries.

Mr. Walker-Smith.—I have this matter under consideration.

Mrs. Castle.—Is the Minister aware that it has been the normal practice up to now for the hospital cadets to receive an increase when the nurses receive one, but that they missed the last increase which the nurses received? Would the Minister give this further and sympathetic consideration, because this is an excellent way of recruiting to nursing?

Mr. Walker-Smith.—I understand that there is not an automatic link between the movements in the pay of cadets and those in the pay of nurses, but I will certainly check the history of the matter. I entirely agree that these girls do excellent work.

Migraine Mr. J. Rankin (Glasgow, Govan) asked the Minister of Health on February 8 to appoint a committee to inquire into the cause and treatment of migraine.

Mr. Walker-Smith.—Migraine is a severe form of headache and a good deal of research is in progress with a view to throwing light on the cause and treatment of the various forms of headache, but I do not think that this would be advanced by the appointment of a committee.

Mr. Rankin.—Is the Minister aware that there are many people who reject entirely his statement that migraine is a severe form of headache? Will he think about this again? Does he realize that there are five million people who suffer from this illness, and there is no generally accepted treatment because nobody yet knows the cause?

Mr. Walker-Smith.—Migraine is a very distressing condition, and I certainly have the greatest sympathy for those who suffer from it. Treatment is available through family doctors and consultant neurologists within the NHS.

Mr. Rankin.—Somebody is deceiving the Minister.

Mr. Walker-Smith.—Research is going on, but we must not fall into the error of thinking that the appointment of a committee is an automatic advancement of knowledge in these technical matters.

More Money for NHS The Spring Civil and Revenue Supplementary Estimates 1959/60 published on February 3 amounted to £76,400,000, in which the National Health Service constituted the largest single item of increased expenditure. An additional £25,600,000 is required to cover the increased cost of the service in England, Wales and Scotland. Of this amount, general hospital services are likely to cost £17,500,000 more than was originally estimated due mainly to salary and wage increases. At the same time, the cost of the pharmaceutical service shows a rise of £5,900,000 attributable to both an increase in the number of prescriptions and a higher unit cost.

BOOK REVIEWS

Enuresis or Bed-wetting. Franklin Bicknell, D.M. Heinemann Medical Books, 7s. 6d.

This handbook epitomizes an expert's views on this difficult and distressing subject. In less than 100 pages Dr. Bicknell discusses the subject from every possible angle in a balanced, impartial manner.

This book is addressed to doctors and parents and should prove a valuable guide to both; perhaps its comprehensive character might make it indigestible and possibly alarming to the average parent, with even the further possibility of danger, if the chapter on medical treatment with details of drugs and dosages were used as a substitute for the seeking of medical aid. Finally, Dr. Bicknell is to be congratulated on the very fine list of references he has given—167 in all!

Day by Day. A guide to prayer for the Church Overseas. Peter Ruffle. The Highway Press, 1s. 3d.

Why should I pray? What is prayer? How do I set about it? Tell me about intercession. If these questions have at any time occupied your thoughts, this little book offers practical answers.

The second half is concerned with daily prayer for some special part of the world where the Church Missionary Society is in action—prayers with a high degree of understanding.

Preliminary Home Nursing. St. John Ambulance Association, 2s. 6d.

Miss L. J. Ottley, formerly matron of Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge, and a past president of the Royal College of Nursing, has written this manual for the St. John Ambulance Association. It is intended principally for junior members and is simply and clearly written and profusely illustrated with clear and attractive sketches. Its distinguished author expresses her hope, in the foreword, that it may not only help in training in the principles of home nursing, and prove of value in the home in time of need, but that it may also awaken an interest in nursing in those who read it, perhaps even pointing the way towards a nursing career in the future.

E.E.P.

Nobody Need be Fat. Robert Kemp, M.D., M.R.C.P. Heinemann Medical Books, 12s. 6d.

The subject of this book has universal appeal! Writing for the lay public and dealing with obesity from every aspect, the author, a physician, claims that he is not an expert in dietetics; one criticism of the book is that he is hardly fair to the dietitian, who is.

His approach is unorthodox. While admitting we are overweight because we overeat, he stresses that some people fail adequately to dispose of surplus. A whole chapter is devoted to the fat child, a modern problem.

The diet recommended, high protein, low carbohydrate and moderate fat, is one that could really be followed and enjoyed. Its chief drawback, its expense, is clearly faced.

The book is full of common sense and interestingly written, although it is irritating in parts and at times the English is poor. It will be of interest and help to those who can be described as 'potentially overweight' as well as to those who actually are.

Home for Tutors

Lewisham Hospital is asking the regional board to approve the erection of a building adjoining the nurses home to accommodate sister tutors. The HMC state that the inadequacy of the existing accommodation is preventing the appointment of a third tutor, for whom provision has already been made in the area nurse training committee's estimates.

Gadgets for the Paralysed

The 'Gadget Leaflets' published by the National Association for the Paralysed are now available as a bound volume. The devices in these 11 leaflets make life easier for people with residual paralysis after a stroke or injury, and help them to be independent of others. There are page-turners for the bookish, a remote control clothes line for the housewife, aids to mobility, aids in the bathroom and toilet, an adjustable hoe for the gardener, and a wide range of other devices. Makers' names are given and in many instances the price is quoted.

The leaflets are available through the association (1, York Street, Baker Street, London, W.1), 1s. each or 10s. for the bound set, plus 6d. for postage and packing. They are not sold to disabled people but are designed for the use of those responsible for the care of the physically handicapped.

A PLASTIC LAUNDRY SKIP has been developed. It is easily steam-sterilized, cannot harbour bacteria, is extremely light and gives complete weather protection—also it should reduce noise.

New Inquiry on Medicines

The composition of the working party set up "to review the legislative provisions which relate to the control of medicinal substances and to recommend what changes should be made to rationalize and simplify the law" was recently announced in Parliament. It consists of 12 officials from the Government departments mainly concerned, of whom two have medical, three legal, and two pharmaceutical qualifications. The inquiry will presumably cover the workings of the Dangerous Drugs, Poisons, and Therapeutic Substances Acts, as well as the desirability of controlling substances not at present subject to legal restriction. The Royal College of Nursing has been invited to submit evidence.

News from Denmark

The Danish Council of Nurses summoned the shop stewards from hospitals all over the country for a meeting in Copenhagen on November 27, to brief them about the recent agreement with the Hospital Association in Denmark.—From the English summary enclosed with Tidsskrift for Sygeplejersker, the official journal of the Danish Council of Nurses, December 1959.

Limiting Prescriptions

All general practitioners are to receive a letter from the Ministry of Health asking them to limit the quantities of drugs they prescribe to not more than one week's supply except in chronic or other exceptional cases. This is in accord with the recommendations of the recent Committee on the Cost of Prescribing (the Hinchliffe Committee), and follows discussions between the Ministry and the British Medical Association, who have agreed to the circular being sent out.

NASEAN Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of branch delegates of the National Association of State Enrolled Assistant Nurses will be held at the Winter Gardens, Blackpool, on Wednesday, March 9. Discussion will include legal aid for NASEAN members and remedying the apparently widespread ignorance among State-registered nurses of assistant nurse training. Candidates for election to the council will be invited to outline their policies. On Tuesday, March 8, the evening before the meeting, Preston Branch will hold a dinner and dance at the Winter Gardens. Details from NASEAN, 21, Cavendish Square, London, W.1, as soon as possible please.

Civic Catering for a Hospital

Birmingham Civic Catering Department has undertaken to supply 850 meals a day for the staff and patients of Birmingham General Hospital. The board of management is still responsible for catering policy and pays for supplies and wages of staff, but the civic catering authority orders food supplies and the employment of key staff is in its hands. Several other hospitals are trying similar experiments, but this is an innovation for Birmingham, and is a mark of readiness to adopt new methods in an effort to solve today's problems. Such an experiment will no doubt be watched with interest by other hospital authorities.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF NURSING

Council Meeting, February 1960

THE COUNCIL of the Royal College of Nursing met on Thursday, February 18, with Mrs. A. A. Woodman in the chair.

One of the most important items in the business of the day was the proposal that certain amendments should be made to the Royal Charter. A number of resolutions proposing amendments both to certain articles in the Charter and to the by-laws were adopted unanimously for submission in accordance with the terms of the Charter to the membership of the College. The resolutions, which are primarily concerned with the proposal to extend College membership, will be placed before the members at an extraordinary general meeting to be held at 10 a.m. on June 23.

The Council also approved suggested arrangements for the meeting at which all members of the College will be given the opportunity to vote on these important matters, either in person or by proxy. Every member of the College will be sent full details of the meeting, with resolutions to be considered, during March, which will give overseas members time to vote.

Representation at International Conferences

It was agreed by Council that Miss M. Cooper, tutor in the Education Department, should accept the invitation to attend a conference for directors of nursing schools at Sèvres in February. The conference was to be organized by the Comité d'Entente des Écoles d'Infirmières at l'École de Cadres de la Croix Rouge.

The 13th International Congress on Occupational Health would be held in New York from July 25-29. The programme committee had invited the Occupational Health Section to send a nurse to the congress to read a paper on the training and education of industrial nurses in Europe, offering to pay expenses. Approval was given by Council to the Section's suggestion that Miss Marjorie Simpson should undertake this. The Council also agreed to send Mrs. Gwen Doherty, the only British nurse member of the Permanent Committee of the International Association on Occupational Health, as another representative.

Education Department

The Council approved the recommendation of the Education Committee that as an experiment the Ward Sisters' Course and the Nursing Administration (Hospital) Course should be open to nurses holding the single qualification of Registered Mental Nurse or Registered Nurse for Mental Defectives.

Superannuation

It was reported that draft amendments to the superannuation regulations, following the investigation of the National Health Service Superannuation Scheme, had been received from the Ministry of Health. It was agreed that the Ministry should again be informed of the particular concern of the College at the proposal that interest should no longer be paid on contributions returned on voluntary withdrawal from the scheme. The College thought that such a proposal should not apply to those already in the scheme who had entered with the expectation of receiving interest.

The meeting ended at 6.30 p.m. The next meeting of the Council will be on March 17.

COLLEGE COUNCIL ELECTION

Election policies of candidates nominated for election to the Council of the Royal College of Nursing will be published in the Nursing Times of March 18.

Extract from a letter from one of our founder members who undertakes knitting for us: ". . . When you have some more wool, maybe you will be so kind as to keep me employed, believe me it is life to me to feel I am giving my time to help keep someone warm and when we get to this time of life that is what we need, kindness and sympathy and the wonderful feeling of being wanted and kept useful. I am afraid this cold weather finds the weak spots but Spring will so soon be here." The writer knitted over 60 ounces of wool in 1959. We still have wool for anyone who will make a warm garment. Our thanks are sent to Miss E. Bryden, Miss Hay per the North Western Metropolitan Branch, Miss Partridge, Mrs. Gusterson, and Miss Smith, for their gifts.

The Branch was joined by members from Cambridge, Lowestoft, Bedford, Bury St. Edmunds and Colchester; 80 members were present altogether. The president-elect, the Hon. Mrs. C. B. Miller, was introduced to the meeting. After the meeting Miss C. M. Hall gave a most helpful talk on the report of the NCN Constitution Standing Committee.

Cashman, secretary, reported that the Branch had representatives on the health and housing, insurance, cancer education campaign, Lord Mayor's World Refugee Year appeal, and hospital house committees. Miss Osborn, in accordance with the custom of Portsmouth Branch, retired at the end of her two years as chairman, and Miss M. Sutcliffe was elected in her place. Miss Thyer opened a discussion on the report of the Constitution Standing Committee of the National Council of Nurses; members decided to consider the matter and have a full discussion at the next meeting on March 17.
